THE STATE

AND ITS PLACE IN THE WORLD'S HALL OF INDUSTRIAL FAME

Population, (Census 1910) 3,366,416.

Massachusetts leads all the States of the Nation and all countries in the world in the manufacture of shoes.

Brockton makes more men's shoes than any other community and has 15,000 of the best paid shoe workers in the world.

Lynn takes equally good care of the feminine portion of the population, making a greater variety of styles than any other shoe city in the world, and, allowing for the larger proportion of women workers, pays even better wages than Brockton.

Haverhill does more for the comfort of people in the home, by producing more and better slippers and low-cut shoes than any other community.

Beverly has the unique distinction of supplying the entire world with shoe machinery.

Peabody is the world's greatest sheepskin tanning center.

Malden and Melrose provide comfort in wet weather by manufacturing more rubber boots and shoes than any other community.

Holyoke is the greatest paper manufacturing center in the Universe.

Springfield and Worcester are famous centers for the production of fine writing papers and envelopes.

Dalton has the distinction of making all the government bank-note paper used in the United States.

Waltham has the largest watch factory in the world.

Firearms of world-wide reputation are made in Springfield and Worcester.

Attleboro and North Attleborough have the very best facilities to meet every demand for jewelry and silverware.

Worcester makes more wire and wire goods than any other city.

Leominster manufactures two-thirds of the combs and hairpins used in the United States,

The pork products of Somerville have increased more than 40 per cent in 10 years and have world-wide reputation for quality.

Gloucester markets more good sea food in the shape of salt codfish than any other port. Her output is about two-thirds of the world's supply.

Fitchburg leads the world in the manufacture of cross-cut saws, screen plates and steel horse collars.

Practically all American textile machinery is made in the machine shops of Lowell, Hopedale, Northbridge, Hyde Park, and Worcester.

Lawrence has the distinction of having the largest worsted mill in the world and of making more worsted goods than any other single community.

Massachusetts is the largest consumer of raw cotton in the United States. Her number of active spindles and her annual production of cotton goods is more than double that of any other State in the Nation.

New Bedford and Fall River are the two most important cotton manufacturing centers in the United States. The gray cloths manufactured in Fall River excel in quantity and quality those of any other State or Nation. New Bedford uses the finer numbers of cotton yarn and produces a greater variety of light weight fancy dress lawns, nainsooks, and fine white goods than any other place.

Plymouth and Ludlow have the two largest cordage mills in the world.

The Massachusetts educational system and institutions are the recognized models.

The Massachusetts Board of Agriculture will be glad to tell you where to buy the best tasting apples in the world and all about the great cranberry industry of Cape Cod.

BOSTON

Population, (Census 1910) City of Boston, 670,585; Metropolitan Boston, 1,423,429.

Boston is the Hub of the Universe.

Boston is the leading textile center in this country.

Boston is the greatest fish market in the United States.

Boston is the largest market for hides and leather in the world and the greatest wool market in the country.

Boston has the largest and most modern ocean freight and passenger terminal in the world.

Boston is the best market for flowers in the United States.

Boston harbor has one of the largest ship-building plants in the country.

Boston leads in candy making and is the greatest chocolate manufacturing city in the country.

Boston has the largest plant in the world for the consumption of raw cocoa, obtaining practically all of her supply from Central and South American countries.

The workmen employed in the industries centering in Boston enjoy an average wage far in excess of that of the wage earners of the country at large.

Boston's total yearly product includes the greatest variety of manufactured goods turned out by any city in the country.

MASSACHUSETTS INDUSTRIES AND FOREIGN TRADE.

MASSACHUSETTS INDUSTRIES.

Massachusetts is pre-eminently a manufacturing State. In a full score of industries, she holds first place in the Western Hemisphere, and, in some very important branches of manufacture, she leads the world.

Her textile and her boot and shoe industries have won for her a nation-wide reputation, but she especially excels in her manufactures of textiles, particularly in that of cotton, a material in well-nigh universal use as a fabric for clothing.

Superb water power is well distributed throughout the State. The most noted stream in this respect in the world, the Merrimac River, courses through the eastern section 110 miles, from its rise in the White Mountains, to the sea, turning more spindles than any other water power on the face of the globe.

Here the pioneers in the textile industries located their mills, at Lowell and at Lawrence, — mills which for centuries have held a place in the first rank for capacity and output.

New Bedford, Fall River, and Taunton are the great textile cities of Southern Massachusetts.

In the central and western section, the rich power of the Connecticut River, the largest and noblest of New England water courses, is utilized by the dozens of mills in "the paper city," Holyoke. Wheels for many of the industries at Greenfield, Northampton, Chicopee, and Springfield are also turned by the river or its tributaries.

With ample seacoast contact and splendid harbor facilities, it is easy to understand the constant lure of the sea, and the early development of the fishing interests of Gloucester and Boston, as well as the beginning of their commercial activity in the export field.

Inland routes of communication have been developed by a close network of railroads, running through the State in all directions, and notwithstanding the natural westward expansion of the centers of production, Massachusetts is, and is likely to be forever, the distributing center of all New England, the product of whose manufacturing industries now amounts annually to nearly one-sixth of the twenty-billion dollar output of the United States.

TEXTILES.

Cotton Goods.

Our cotton mills, located principally on the seacoast, are favored by the naturally moist, damp climate which gives the humidity so essential to the successful pursuit of this industry. Our abundant water power turns no less than 11,072,000 spindles, and we have easy access to the practically inexhaustible cotton fields of the southern states, which produce annually more than 13,000,000 bales of raw cotton of 500 pounds each, or upwards of two-thirds of the total crop of the world, and are, therefore, quite independent of any outside sources of supply.

The value of Massachusetts' production in cotton goods is greater than that of all the other New England states put together, and is approximately equal to the entire output of our southern States. (See chart, opp. p. 26.) As compared with continental Europe, we have twice the product of Germany, and more than Italy, France, and Austria-Hungary combined. The total cotton goods production of the United States amounts annually to upwards of $535,000,000, and of this tremendous volume, the mills of Massachusetts produce substantially one-third, (see chart, opp. p. 26), the total for 1913 being $211,525,018 in cotton piece goods and yarn. This does not include made up clothing of cotton, which would increase the total by some $10,000,000 more. We had 168 mills in operation in 1913, with an aggregate capital of more than a quarter of a billion, ($254,547,295). These mills are equipped with the most up-to-date automatic machinery, and have the most efficient labor force, per unit of production, of any country in the world. The industry gives employment to 115,000 wage-earners, and pays annually not less than $54,000,000 in wages.

The Massachusetts cotton goods market has been so great, its demand so steady, its prices so good, and its consumption so broad, that we have thus far given our attention chiefly to domestic demand, the annual exports amounting to only about $7,000,000, or less than four per cent of the $212,000,000 produced. But our manufacturers fully appreciate the fact that we are now entering upon an era of expansion, and that, owing to the increasing calls from other countries, it is incumbent upon us to take up immediately the work of supplying these outside markets. It may well be that varieties, other than our standard makes, will be desired, and, if so, our manufacturers will be glad to take conditions as they find them, ascertaining which of their lines can be best extended: for we have the capacity, the capital, and the skilled labor to meet the requirements of any country, and at the same time not neglect our own.

We can put goods of the standard makes on the markets of any country as cheap, or cheaper, than any other nation in the world. Moreover, an analysis of the export trade of the principal exporting country, Great Britain, brings out the fact that gray goods, the staple product of nearly every cotton mill in Fall River, lead all other kinds in volume and value.

Our cotton staple is fine, long, and possessed of great comparative strength; far superior to that of India, the second largest cotton growing country in the world, the texture of whose cotton fibre is coarse and relatively weak. As a matter of fact, the typical garments of the native East Indians, dhooties, are made of a medium grade of American cotton, spun in England, and sent to them in the form of yarn ready for weaving in their home looms, the native cotton being too coarse to produce the quality of cloth desired.

Our sheetings and shirtings are noted for their splendid wearing qualities. It is even said of them that they are "too strongly made to be cheap," but this simply means that pound for pound they are better value than those of English, German, or French manufacture, and that they have secured their reputation by being honestly made of good cotton with more picks to the inch and less weighting with clay than those of any other country, without exception.

Our cotton prints, using that term broadly to include lawns, cambrics, chambrays, gingham, sateens, and similar fabrics, are given that special attention regarding fast color, finish, and design which render them generally pleasing and satisfactory to the consumer, and we have specially fine grades of such solid colors as the indigos and the Turkey reds which seem to be preferred in many countries.

Our mills also make quantities of yarn for further manufacture in countries where they do no spinning, and for knitting purposes. Out of a total of $30,000,- Famed for their wearing worth. 000 made in the United States in a single year, the Massachusetts' mills produced 41 per cent.

Going hand in hand with this tremendous volume of cotton goods production, it is not surprising that we should have a large by-product in the shape of cotton waste, and that we make a specialty of the cleaning and baling of this material to be utilized in the manufacture of the cheaper fabrics, made in countries operating mule spinning frames, or for such uses as machine wiping and journal packing, for the manufacture of cotton filling for bedding, cotton wicks, and similar purposes. As a matter of fact this class of goods, up to the present time, has formed one of our important articles of cotton goods export.

Woolen and Worsted Goods.

Second only to cotton goods among the textiles, the woolen and worsted goods industry has been developed in Massachusetts, and in this branch, also, she leads all the other states of the Union, the product of her mills, approximately $140,000,000 annually, forming about one-third of the total woolen manufactures of the United States, (see chart, opp. p. 26), the aggregate production in round numbers being $436,000,000. She has nearly twice the product of Pennsylvania and Rhode Island, the two states nearest in output, and more than all the other states of the Union put together. Her 168 mills have a capital of $136,579,414, employ approximately 54,000 wage-earners (53,697), and utilize upwards of 400,000 horse power annually. The industry has made phenomenal strides in recent years, — with the more or less temporary fluctuation in 1913, — and the output has practically doubled itself in the course of a single decade.

The city of Lawrence has the distinction of having the largest and best equipped worsted mill in the world, and this is only an example of many similarly equipped modern establishments all over the State. The recent removal of the duty on wool has given our manufacturers the incentive to supply artistic goods in worsteds for men's wear, dress materials, serges, blankets, and other woollen goods of superior texture and workmanship. For climates where lighter clothing with some warmth is required, there are the trouserings and skirtings of mixed cotton and wool, or of cotton warp with worsted filling.

Dyeing and Finishing of Textiles.

Particular attention is given by our mills to the dyeing and finishing of textiles. Massachusetts specializes in this department, and is the foremost state in the work of giving the final treatment and finish to goods manufactured in other mills. Of the total volume of business done by such establishments in the United States, $83,556,432, Massachusetts contributed $21,892,890, or considerably more than one-fourth. This represents the value added by the several processes, and does not include the original value of the materials treated. In 1913, in 49 establishments, the value thus added for dyeing and finishing amounted to $25,125,931, and gave employment to 11,688 wage earners.

Cordage and Twine.

In still another branch of the textile industry, cordage and twine, Massachusetts is the leading state, the towns of Ludlow and Plymouth being associated with extensive manufactures of these specialties of which, in 1913, we produced upwards of $20,000,000. .

Our binder twine is well known in Canada, Argentina, Russia, and every other wheat-growing country in the world, and our rope and cable have unlimited uses in mining and manufacturing, for power transmission, and for maritime purposes.

Hosiery and Knit Goods.

Massachusetts enjoys a leading position in the manufacture of hosiery and knit goods. This industry is becoming each year more important, the product having doubled itself in less than a decade and the annual output now standing at about $20,000,000, approximately evenly divided between hosiery on the one side and knit underwear, cardigan jackets, sweaters, scarfs, etc. on the other. Our goods have heretofore been sold principally in the home market, but we shall be glad of the opportunity to acquaint exporters with the excellent quality and superior form and finish of our Massachusetts products.

BOOTS AND SHOES AND LEATHER.

But if Massachusetts has pride of place in the textile industries, higher still is her position in the manufacture of boots and shoes. Of the aggregate value of goods in this industry for the United States, $512,797,642, her share was nearly one-half (46.1 per cent), or $236,342,915. (See chart, opp. p. 26.) Her output is five times that of the state of Missouri or of New York, more than six times that of New Hampshire and Ohio, respectively, and seven times that of Pennsylvania. In fact, as has been stated, her product, 46 per cent of the total, is very nearly as great as that of all the other states put together. In 1913 the figures, including cut stock and findings, had advanced to $269,039,115, representing the output of upwards of 500 factories, employing 81,228 wage earners.

Not only do we lead in the production of these goods in our own country, but Massachusetts, in her capital city, Boston, has also the greatest shoe and leather market in the world. The cities of Lynn, Brockton, and Haverhill suggest shoe manufacturing the world over, and the city of Boston is the great distributing center for an enormous shoe and leather trade, shipping more than 200,000,000 pairs of shoes annually, and handling a yearly commerce in hides, skins, and leather to the extent of $150,000,000. These hides and skins come to us from Argentina, Uruguay, and other South and Central American countries, from Russia, Great Britain, Germany, France, in fact from whatever nation can supply us good material to make up into shoes, — for our home production in hides and leather, though by no means inconsiderable in amount, is insufficient to keep our shoe factories running to anything like their full capacity. In 1913, we had 127 leather establishments with $42,294,310 in capital, a product of $46,474,470, employing 10,321 operatives, and distributing a total wage of $6,138,384. Peabody, the world's greatest sheepskin tanning center, is only an hour's ride from Boston.

greatest mart for shoes.

The honor of establishing the boot and shoe industry in its primitive form, — dating as far back as 1636, belongs to Lynn. But it developed rapidly in all directions until in an incredibly short time there were few towns in the State which did not pride themselves on the ownership of a shoe factory. With the expansion of the industry in the last quarter of a century, and particularly in the last decade, Massachusetts has invested her surplus capital in new enterprises in the South and Middle West, sending her managers and skilled workmen to carry the torch of industry into new fields, and, "as one lamp lights another, nor grows less," she has helped other communities to establish themselves, while maintaining her own pre-eminence in the industry.

We have already extended our field to nearby and to distant countries. Our manufactures of boots and shoes are nearly six times those of England, whose annual production is about $100,000,000, and more than those together of France, Germany, and Spain, — the principal producing countries outside the United States. We have, in a single factory with capacity for 40,000 pairs daily, as large an output as all Switzerland with some 30 odd factories combined can produce. Orders have only recently been received, in as high as 500,000 pair lots, and it is possible for this and other establishments to make and ship such orders in ten days' or two weeks' time.

The demand for American-made shoes is steadily increasing throughout Europe, and all our details of style, in pattern, last, and construction are introduced as far as possible into the native shops of these countries, while the old style French and German lasts are fast disappearing before the comfortable American shapes. We are also sending quantities of cut uppers and soles, as well as shoe machinery, to our Central and South American friends, and to those of Mexico, Canada, Cuba, and the Philippines, where they are put together by native workmen.

"Made in
goods.

By reason of the length and breadth of this land, and our enormous home market, we have been able to carry this industry to the highest point of specialization. We have perfected each and every line, in factories producing shoes for men, exclusively; shoes for women; for misses; for youths; and for infants. Colonials, oxfords, slippers, pumps, gaiter effects, and dancing shoes are made in infinite variety. We have also special lines in boots for rough wear, such as are used for exploring, lumbering, engineering, and mining; boots for hunting and riding, and shoes for other athletic and gymnasium uses.

For wear in the warmer countries, our tan shoes have found great favor, and our white canvas shoes with good leather soles have commended themselves for their lightness and durability. In rubber boots and shoes alone, our production in 1913 was approximately twenty-five million dollars ($24,733,926), and this amount is not included in the $269,000,000 output for 1913 which was principally in leather shoes. Our manufacturers are giving special attention to making their goods equal in quality to the samples submitted for orders, and it is our pride to send first class shoes to our American neighbors, and to our friends across the seas.

Of such accessories as shoe lasts we make more than any other state or country, turning out a product of nearly two and a half millions in 1913, and our shoe blacking and dressings are known in every community in the world where shoes are worn, the output from 50 factories in 1913 being nearly $4,000,000 ($3,715,683).

PAPER.

In manufactures of paper, the United States leads the world, and Massachusetts is the leading state in the production of high-class ledger, bond, fine writing, and book papers.

The industry in Massachusetts is centralized along the Connecticut River, principally in the cities of Holyoke and Springfield, and, dotted here and there among the western hills, many a small town owes its prosperity to the utilization of its water power in the manufacture of paper. There are also large mills in the city of Worcester, and some model plants in the eastern section of the state, in Lawrence, Hyde Park and Walpole. In all, there are some 89 mills with a capital of $50,185,755, in 1913, producing upwards of 600,000 tons of paper valued at $48,371,425, in which 14,343 wage-earners are employed, and $8,190,605 distributed in wages. The three-shift system is in very general use, and the mills are operated day and night, with the exception of Sunday.

Paper mills are busy day and night.

The day of hand manufacture of paper, which still obtains in several European countries, has long since passed in the United States, and our manufacturers, by reason of their excellent modern machines of American make, can produce the finest grades of paper in enormous quantities at a minimum cost.

All the paper used by the national government for its issues of bonds, bank notes, etc., is made in Dalton, Massachusetts, a little town situated in the heart of the far-famed Berkshire Hills.

Our book papers are unsurpassed for fineness of quality, texture, and finish. They are made with proper regard for durability, and will not become yellow with time, nor brittle with age, — characteristics common enough of inferior papers, — and the print is always legible.

Our blotting papers are in general favor, and our particular brands of roofing paper are found in the markets of every country in the world.

Envelopes and correspondence papers are specialties which have been among our articles of export for many years, and quality is the watchword on which they are sold. In endless variety also are the fancy crepe papers, confectionery boxes, and notions in paper goods, which the importer may spend many a leisure moment enjoying, and never exhaust the stock.

MACHINE TOOLS AND FOUNDRY PRODUCTS.

For a decade and a half, Massachusetts has had an acknowledged lead in the manufacture of high-grade machine tools. The early development of this important industry was due largely to existing economic conditions which made it necessary to set about tool building for the construction and exploitation of our vast railroad systems, our immense iron and steel interests, and our rapid growth of other manufactures.

Technical schools, the basis of our success in tool building, are now maintained in every large center; originality and inventive genius are fostered, and we have an abundance of skilled workmen trained from youth in our continuation schools, which aim to bring together tasks and aptitudes.

There is an essential difference in the work of our manufacturers, and that of European tool builders, in the fact that the latter, with few exceptions, concern themselves with varied lines. A European tool-house, for example, undertakes to build 150 different designs in machine tools because its business will not warrant specializing, while our home demand is so great that it will permit the centering of effort on a single variety of lathe, or drill, or planer, until it is perfected, with the result that comes with such specialization, viz. — the knowledge and experience to produce at a minimum cost.

Wherever high-grade work is demanded, such as in the manufacture of automobiles, firearms, electrical apparatus, and power machinery, tools of precision are essential, and it is in this field that our Massachusetts products claim first consideration. In the workshops of every country where manufacturing has been extensively developed will be found tools of Massachusetts design and manufacture. The lathes and planers from our Worcester, Fitchburg, and Springfield shops; milling machines from Hyde Park factories, twist drills from New Bedford, boring machines and cutting-off machines from Hudson and Sudbury, machines for making taps and dies and drills from Athol, are only casual examples of our many lines. Some of our machines will do the work of several others, and manufacturing plants will find their use economical in such important matters as space, driving power, lubrication, and attendance.

First place
of precision.

It, of course, hardly needs to be pointed out that machine tools cannot be sold on any such basis as groceries or other commodities for immediate consumption. The only way is to have them introduced by expert machinist representatives, who can personally demonstrate what work the tools will do. Our manufacturers understand this situation and desire only a better acquaintance with the heads of manufacturing plants in other countries who appreciate the practical as well as the commercial side of the problem. Our field is constantly expanding as the different countries develop manufacturing interests, because the products of our tool houses are intended to save labor, reduce cost, and at the same time produce superior work.

TEXTILE MACHINERY.

Naturally in a state holding so many textile interests as Massachusetts, the manufacture of textile machinery has gone hand in hand with the development of the textile industry, and our American friends from Mexico and Brazil, as well as those from Japan, India, China, Russia, and other countries where textile mills are being established will have more than a passing interest in our looms and ring-spinning machines, and in numerous other automatic devices for labor saving in the spinning and weaving of yarn. Machine shops at Hopedale, Hyde Park, Worcester, and Northbridge are engaged exclusively in this kind of work, and our manufacturers are past masters in the building of machines for use in these important fundamental industries.

BOOT AND SHOE MACHINERY.

Our boot and shoe machinery needs no introduction to the markets of the world. It is only another instance where inventive genius has revolutionized production, the work of more than 100 wonderful machines entering into the manufacture of the twentieth century shoe. These machines, in well-nigh universal use to-day, are made by skilled workmen in the splendidly equipped factory at Beverly, Massachusetts, and the standardized parts are assembled in branch establishments of the company, located in the principal European centers.

ELECTRICAL MACHINERY, APPARATUS, AND SUPPLIES.

In this highly specialized industry, Massachusetts has forged ahead by leaps and bounds, her proportional increase since the beginning of the century being greater than that of any other state in the Union. The total value of product from 80 establishments in 1913 amounted to nearly 55 millions of dollars, ($54,433,691), a gain of 439 per cent since 1900, when the figure stood at $10,490,000. The capital invested is upwards of 33 millions, the number of employees 22,000, and the wages paid in 1913, $14,352,758.

The goods produced cover a very wide range, including heavy machinery, electric railroad supplies, and all sorts of lighter apparatus. Our electric motors for railroads excel in wearing qualities and will stand more hard usage than those of any other country. Motormen say that they can turn on the current as rapidly as they choose without fear of disturbing the mechanism, whereas foreign equipment necessitates frequent adjustment.

Vast improvements have been made in electric lighting and heating apparatus and we have some wonderful specialties in electric clocks.

AUTOMOBILES.

Automobiles are costly products, and it is apparent that to sell outside the domestic markets they must possess an obvious superiority to those of other makes. The cars made in Springfield, Watertown, Waltham, and Boston are known all over the world, their best assets being the high quality of the material and workmanship, their beauty of design, and their ability to give the maximum of service.

Our small cars are in especially high favor and can compete with any of the low or medium priced cars of other makes, and our sales lead to-day even in the markets of Europe, where they make many beautiful cars. In fact, it is impossible to export American automobiles rapidly enough to meet the demand, and the establishment of branch factories in London and on the Continent is not uncommon. An anecdote from an authentic source may be illuminating:

At the military manœuvres in Russia, only as late as 1912, there was a test of automobiles. All kinds of tests were made, — to get over ground the fastest, to get over rough ground, over muddy ground, tests of endurance, of long-distance running, etc. — and it was an American automobile, with a factory now located in Cambridge, Massachusetts, which took the first prize.

With our superior factory organization, cheapness of production is assured; the standardization of parts reduces the difficulty of quick repair to a minimum; and we are able to demonstrate economy of operation, a feature appreciated in countries where gasoline is an important item of expense. The excellence of American cars for travelling over roads that are not level is widely acknowledged; the speed and ease with which they run, and the way they have of romping past any other car of equal power up the average hill are never-failing sources of wonder. We want to get the small car within easy reach of the great middle class who would consider $300 to $800 a reasonable outlay and not an extravagance, and we can make machines to suit the prevailing taste in any country, even if it be the inexpensive cycle car so much in favor in England. Once a few cars of the smaller type are started in a new field, the automobile idea spreads rapidly and the American product comes to stay.

NAILS, WIRE, HARDWARE, PIPE, AND FITTINGS.

Massachusetts is the ranking state in the manufacture of wire. Her extensive mills in Worcester are known all over the world, making goods which are important to all agricultural countries for fencing cattle, pasture lands, and for a thousand other uses. The output of wire and wire goods in Massachusetts in 1913 amounted to $15,000,000 and employed 7,000 wage earners, and her manufactures of nails and builders' hardware together amounted to $7,000,000 more. In steam pipe and fittings and steam accessories, our goods, of which more than $8,000,000 annually are manufactured, are sold extensively in foreign markets, for, like American machine tools, these articles require the precise workmanship in which we excel, and stand on their merits regardless of competition.

FIREARMS.

Revolvers, rifles, and shot guns form important articles in daily use by three-fourths of the male population in most tropical countries. In addition to their use for self protection, they are used for hunting birds and animals and to guard against reptiles.

Massachusetts' goods are in such high repute that they form the standard by which all the cheaper foreign makes are measured. Cartridges made especially for the firearms of a well-known Springfield manufacturer pass readily from hand to hand as a medium of exchange.

The United States maintains two arsenals in the state, one in Springfield and the other in Watertown.

JEWELRY AND OTHER INDUSTRIES.

Although an abundance of energy is expended in producing the useful things, we do not altogether neglect items of personal adornment. A little section of the State is practically committed to the manufacture of jewelry, comprising the towns of Attleboro, North Attleborough, and Plainville, where no less than $16,000,000 worth of these goods were made in 1913.

The commonplace necessities, combs and hairpins, for the supply of the hundred million inhabitants of the United States, are taken care of by Massachusetts, in the single town of Leominster, which produced nearly $4,000,000 worth in 1913, or about 60 per cent of the total consumed in the country.

The manufacture of whips is relatively important, the town of Westfield, Massachusetts, being the principal center of the industry for the country, producing upwards of $3,000,000 in 1913.

Winchendon is an important center for the production of toys.

Manufactures of musical instruments, approximating, in 1913, $10,000,000, cannot be overlooked, especially our pianos, which will well repay a fair share of the attention of exporters. Pianos made abroad are frequently combinations of American piano actions with foreign cases.

Our manufactures of cigars and cigarettes approximated $8,000,000 in 1913, and our manufactures of malt liquors doubled that amount.

The shipbuilding plant at Quincy has facilities for manufacturing the largest vessels afloat.

FOOD.Pork Products.

Massachusetts' lard, bacon, hams, and other pork products are of such quality that they may be said to be above competition. They are well-known in England, Austria, Germany, France, and the Netherlands, large importations being sent to these countries notwithstanding the fact that the home industry is given considerable attention. Our domestic demand also is very extensive, the industry showing increase in product value from $28,012,000 in 1904 to $54,312,644 in 1913, or over 40 per cent in less than a decade.

Confectionery and Chocolate.

This industry, practically unknown 15 years ago, has been so rapidly developed in Massachusetts, that the product has increased 100 per cent in less than five years, the value of goods made in 1913 amounting to $20,000,000. In addition to the sugar used in these confections, chocolate, one of the products of the cocoa bean, forms a large part of the materials used.

The world's crop of the cocoa bean now amounts to about 550,000,000 pounds annually. It is produced very largely in the South American States, Ecuador and Brazil being two of our greatest producing countries, although there are smaller amounts from Cuba, the West Indies, and other tropical America. Practically the only other source is Africa where they are engaged to some extent in its cultivation. Of this large amount, the United States consumes about one-quarter, or more than France and England together, more than Germany, and as much as Spain, Switzerland, Holland, and the Netherlands. Besides the chocolate used in the manufacture of confectionery, the United States produces annually in cocoa powder, chocolate, and cocoa shells, some $25,000,000, nearly half of which is made in Massachusetts.

Our manufacturers can compete with those of Germany and Switzerland, the two most important chocolate manufacturing countries, and still greater economies of production will now be possible since we shall be able to secure the raw material more directly from the abundant South American sources.

We have already made a beginning in the exportation of our delicious confections, finding ready markets in Russia, Australia, the Philippines, and Cuba, the attractiveness of the boxes and the dainty methods of packing adding greatly to the success of our sales in this novel field.

Fish Preserving.

In this, the earliest of her economic activities, Massachusetts holds important interests which the course of time has not been able to diminish. The export business of the colonists had its beginning in their trade with Spain, and the particular object in trade was the codfish which they caught upon their own Massachusetts coast or off the Grand Banks, and exchanged for the sugar, molasses, and rum of the Spanish merchant. Other industries have far out-stripped in the race this original source of wealth, but the codfish, often referred to at home as "Cape Cod Turkey," can be secured nowhere in the world except in North Atlantic waters, and in its preserved form, dried and salted, it is a most welcome addition to the universal food supply, — for combined with rice or other starchy vegetable it insures a perfectly balanced ration. The superiority of this cold-water fish for preserving is widely acknowledged, no less than $7,000,000 worth being treated in 1913 in establishments in Gloucester and Boston, the two principal manufacturing centers.

Apples and Cranberries.

Worthy of mention here, though not coming within the scope of her manufacturing interests, are two important industries to which nature has made peculiarly generous contributions. These are apples and cranberries. With reference to the former, there is no section where the flavor, the juiciness, the sweetness, and all the other factors, on which we base our estimates of quality in apples, are more highly developed than in Massachusetts. The Connecticut valley, in the western part of the state, and Worcester county in the central section are famous apple districts, and, though for a while the orchards were allowed to run out, the raising of this crop is becoming a great industry, whole districts being engaged in its cultivation, the high rolling lands, ideal for this purpose, — yielding more than 3,000,000 bushels a year. New orchards have been recently set out, with the best possible results, and gilt-edged prices are obtained for the fruit from importers, who are willing to pay for the certainty of getting something which is good.

Quality is also our motto in the cranberry field. This delicious fruit, for the making of jellies and jams, grows most abundantly in the sandy soil of Cape Cod, all the towns along the seacoast being engaged in cranberry culture, for which the soil and climate are particularly favorable. Their bright red color, and the delicate tracery of their trailing vines, make beautiful table decorations, for which purpose they are sometimes used, but no place is their flavor so appreciated as when served as a relish with roast turkey or chicken. Of this inexpensive fruit more than 25,000,000 quarts are picked in a single season, the 1913 crop being the largest ever known, and as their keeping qualities, like that of the apple, are of the first order, they lend themselves easily to transportation, and make an excellent article of export. They will be at their best during the time of the Exposition and importers will not fail to be interested to make the acquaintance of these delicious and healthful fruits.

If it is true, as has been said, that "advancement is due to ease of mingling, and that great natural highways are the paths to progress," then the conquering of Nature in making the Panama Canal a natural highway to the Pacific Ocean and the Far East, may be expected to multiply opportunities as yet undreamed of.

FOREIGN TRADE.

THE OPPORTUNITIES OF THE CANAL.

The new water route, via the Panama Canal, bringing surely with it the closer association of the peoples of the two Americas, offers to the manufacturers of the United States, and especially to those of Massachusetts, a rare opportunity to extend their export trade in the countries to the south of us, which are accustomed to secure their supplies from European producers.

This part of the Western Hemisphere, known as Latin-America, is not only the land of the Amazon River and the Andes Mountains, but is also a land of tremendous trade opportunities. The total imports of all merchandise imports into these countries now amount to $1,539,000,000 annually, of which the United States supplies in round numbers some $317,000,000. Much the larger portion, of course, comes from Great Britain and Continental Europe, the generally accepted opinion being that the trade was originally established with these countries and they, therefore, would take care of it. On the other hand, these southern countries are our neighbors, they belong to the "All American" Union and if we consider our trade relations with them, we find that the United States has a big lead over Great Britain and Germany. In fact, our total purchases, amounting to $504,000,000 annually, are practically equal to both these nations combined, Great Britain, $316,000,000, and Germany, $192,000,000. The fact that imports do not always come to us by direct shipment, in no way impairs our position as the final consumers of Latin-American products. The principal reason why we have not sought more intimate trade relations in this important field is because our business men have found ample return for their efforts in the nearer home market. They now realize that the opening of the canal begins a new chapter in the world's history and that for us the home field has simply widened, bringing markets that have heretofore been removed from the direct line of natural trade into daily contact with us.

These countries furnish a market, in cotton goods alone, of over one hundred million dollars, and, while there are, of course, many other imports, cotton goods are apparently the largest single item in the country's needs, and will continue so for many years to come on account of the limited number of native mills.

Generally speaking, Great Britain has supplied about one-half of all the cotton goods imports; Germany, about one-seventh, and the United States, approximately one-tenth, while the balance comes from Italy, France, and other countries.

It is apparent, however, that under the new conditions, our trade with these countries will be enormously increased, for, by reason of their geographical position, and the new water route, it is now both easy and natural for American manufacturers to assist in supplying their urgent needs. Many classes of cotton goods made in the United States, and in the Massachusetts mills in particular, are precisely similar to those in prevailing demand in the Central and South American countries, and all of these countries will find in Massachusetts a wonderful source of supply.

Argentina.

Of the total imports into Argentina, $371,000,000, in 1913, the United States supplied little over one-seventh, ($57,000,000). Although she is the largest importer of cotton goods in South America, up to this time our sales to her have taken the shape of only cotton bags for flour, cotton yarn, and duck. The domestic mills in Argentina make duck because it is used in the manufacture of the native shoes, but they do not produce enough for their shoe manufacturers' requirements, and the latter prefer, if they can get it, American duck which is of superior quality and finish.

The bulk of the cotton goods imported into Argentina, however, is piece-goods of the kinds classed as printed, dyed, colored, bleached, and gray.

In the Philippines, Canada, India, and in other countries, American prints are sold in competition with those of European manufacture, even though the prices in America fluctuate very much more rapidly than they do in Europe, and they could doubtless be sold to a considerable extent in Argentina, for a standard width made in our mills, 27-28 inch print, has certainly a very large demand, and it answers every requirement as regards fast color and durability. Printed flannelets also form a large item of import, and they, too, are made extensively in our Lowell and New Bedford mills.

Massachusetts manufacturers are showing a kindlier disposition toward meeting the requirements of the Latin-American countries. They are now putting up goods in the form and of the number of yards desired, and marking them in the metric system, which is the established order of the country. The State Panama-Pacific Commission is also bringing powerful influence to bear, and our manufacturers are now ready to send traveling men with a wide range of samples and quotations.

Seek

duck for its quality.

We are able to compete on all of the lines mentioned. On pure finished goods for bed sheeting, the Massachusetts products set the standard for the world, and the quotations are in some years even lower than those of the British. Our Massachusetts mills stand first in the country in the production of cotton yarns for further manufacture, and while the Argentina mills do no spinning, the local knitting mills require over $1,000,000 worth of yarn annually, so that it needs only to be called to the attention of the Argentinians that we are abundantly able to supply their requirements in all kinds and sizes.

A peculiarity of bleached goods called T cloths are also bought extensively. They are a cheap product well filled with starch and clay, and have a woven colored head at the beginning of the piece. These are not made by the Massachusetts mills, and no effort has been made to secure this market, although easily within reach, for which they could supply, at competing prices, a better grade of goods.

The trade in cotton bags is the only article of Argentina import in which the United States leads. These bags are used for flour and are made principally in North Carolina, Maine, and Massachusetts, the United States altogether furnishing about 75 per cent of the total requirements. The cloth of which they are made is the American drill. English bags with which they compete are made of a softer spun yarn, cheaper than the American, but at the expense of strength, and ours are recognized as being of much better value for the prices asked.

The item of tariff on cotton goods in Argentina is moderate, and with the large houses that do most of the importing, long time credit is, contrary to conditions in many countries, not so much of a consideration, some of them even preferring to get a cash discount. We have, too, a very great advantage, which the importers generally do not seem to be aware of, in the fact that the freight rate from this country is much lower than it is from any port of Europe.

The exports of Argentina have for a long time exceeded her imports, the bank reserves have been strengthened from year to year, and the paper money of the country has been put on a stable basis. There is a considerable amount of coastwise shipping, and the railroad facilities for the further shipment of goods into the interior are excellent. Recent branch connections with the National City Bank of New York, the first American banking agency established south of Panama, will tend to create additional confidence among exporters and other business men. This bank will furnish all the usual facilities of such institutions, accept deposits, issue letters of credit, handle collections, and deal in exchange. In other words, it will create a market for American money so that direct exchange will become a fact between South America and the United States, and through its commercial representatives, the bank will gather credit information which will be of mutual benefit to all concerned.

It is not to be supposed, however, that this trade is to be all one-sided. We intend to sell to Argentina and we expect to buy from her. As is well known she is essentially a food producing country, her resources consisting principally of cattle and sheep, and the crops of wheat, linseed, and maize.

Cotton, however, cannot be raised here as cheaply as in the United States; there is neither natural nor artificial means of obtaining power, — coal having to be imported; and there is no raw material, except wool, for any great manufacturing industry.

There is, therefore, abundant opportunity for reciprocity, and while we do not need her grain, we can purchase from her, almost without limit, valuable cargoes of hides and skins for our shoe factories, quebracho bark and other tanning materials for our leather industries, and the chemicals and dye stuffs which she produces so abundantly, — and we can send her, in addition to our textiles and our boots and shoes, binder twine for her enormous crops, agricultural machinery, automobiles, firearms and gunpowder, machine tools, wire for cattle fences, pianos, and paper for use in the far-famed newspaper building and plant of which Buenos Aires, her capital city, is so justly proud.

Opportunities for reciprocity abundant.

Brazil.

Since the clothing of the people of the Amazon valley consists mainly of cotton, it is not surprising that Brazil is the second largest importer of cotton goods in South America. Trouserings, cottonades, shirting, and drill are in considerable demand, but the largest items of import are dyed and colored goods, prints, and white goods. In white goods, such as lawns and muslins, medium grade goods with considerable of the finer classes are in general demand, and the Brazilians prefer these goods in a soft finish. Especially is this true of those going into the port of Para.

The low quality heavily-sized goods, made in European countries almost exclusively, find no market here, and stiff finish is properly considered a mark of inferiority. Fortunately for the Massachusetts mills, which can so easily compete in price, the Brazilians want two good selvages on their prints, such as are commonly produced in our mills. In fact, "split prints," that is, goods woven so that they may be torn down the center, thus giving two widths each with one selvage, have almost never been produced in Massachusetts, all prints being woven with two good selvages not intended to be separated.

There are native cotton mills in Brazil of no inconsiderable number. In fact her cotton manufactures amount to some $40,000,000 annually. And Brazil grows cotton of several kinds. The bulk of it is, however, harsh, though strong, and is best suited for making coarse yarns which accounts for the domestic mills making only the gray and medium grade goods. Even of these, however, they can supply only a portion of the home market, and with the increasing wealth of the people, the demand is for finer goods, — the total value of cotton imports being now about $20,000,000 annually.

The goods that have been heretofore supplied by our Massachusetts mills are chiefly those for workingmen's wear such as blue drills, chambrays, hickory shirting, pin-head checks, and plaids. These goods are regarded as standard as regards both quality and durability. The mills of southern Brazil pay us the compliment of making imitations of them, United States customer. especially of the overall materials, which, it must be admitted, show defects in both the yarn and weaving, but so good is the reputation of the original, that dealers often sell these cheaper Brazilian goods for genuine and make large profits.

Obviously, our sales of these goods could be very largely increased, for the Brazilian importers, recognizing a material in general favor, will be interested to secure a desirable line of goods for which there is an assured market.

Para, the gateway of the Amazon and the most northern port of Brazil, is nearer to Boston than to Liverpool. The reason for its enormous trade is apparent when it is understood that by law all the ships of the Amazon have to enter and clear at this port. Moreover, eighty per cent of the rubber of the world is grown in the Amazon valley and every pound obtained from its ten million trees has to clear at the port of Para. This makes it a money center, and its business men finance, — often with American capital, — the rubber plantations which are located in the remote interior. The other natural products of the country are cocoa, — in which crop Brazil stands second in rank among the countries of the world, — coffee, Brazilian nuts, goatskins, and cattle hides.

All of these products are in constant demand in Massachusetts, and as the United States is today the best purchaser of Brazilian products, it would seem that larger exchanges should be possible, since of Brazil's $362,000,000 in exports in 1913, we took upwards of $142,000,000, or nearly one-half. Her principal needs, besides cotton goods, which Massachusetts can supply, are electrical machinery, machine tools, metal-working machines, firearms for the rubber gatherers, boots and shoes, tanned upper leather and findings, pork products and wire. The total imports are now about $308,000,000.

Chile.

Chile, on the west coast of South America, occupying the narrow strip of land between the Andes and the Pacific Ocean, is a great gainer by the new canal route which obviates the long trip through the Strait of Magellan or around Cape Horn.

Chile ranks third in the South American countries as a buyer of cotton goods, importing about nine and one-half million dollars worth annually, and although there are a few small cotton mills, and seven or eight local knitting mills, conditions are not favorable to domestic textile industries, the only production being a limited amount of gray goods, coarse flannels, and knit underwear. In the order of importance, the imports of cottons are colored and dyed goods, (dyed in the piece), white shirting, knit goods, printed flannelet, drills, yarn, gray sheeting, sewing thread, and cotton waste. The yarn market is important, for no spinning is done in Chile, and the weaving and knitting mills need yarn, a specialized product which our Massachusetts mills have brought to the highest degree of perfection.

The Chilean market demands napped goods of all kinds, because the climate is colder than in the other South American countries, and printed flannelet, or outing flannels, to a large extent take the place of prints, which are not much of a feature on the Chilean market. Germany supplies a cheap product in flannelet, but the Massachusetts mills have better goods in this line, as will be apparent from an examination of our attractive samples:

Perhaps the largest single import is that of white shirting. The best of this is the well-known Centennial brand, of which there are numerous imitations. Next comes our popular gray sheeting, 36 inches wide, which the Chileans prefer in Massachusetts standard makes, and to which the attention of exporters is specially called.

In Chile, as in Argentina, the United States dominates the market in flour bags, but in Argentina the bags are imported ready-made, while in Chile, where labor is cheaper, the gray drills are imported, and the bags made up. The Chilean bag is cheaper and less durable, because it is required for only a short distance, exports of grain going principally to Peru and Bolivia, while Argentina sends to Europe and Brazil.

The Chilean duties on cotton goods are moderate, generally equivalent to about 25 per cent ad valorem, and there is a

Preference given to standard makes of this State.	system of parcels post there which permits the sending of one, two, or three cuts of cloth (according to units of 20 or 40 yard lengths), and while the duty must be paid as usual, other charges, such as lightering, for example, are not imposed, and the goods have the additional advantage of being delivered more quickly.

The freight charges at all times have been lower from Boston than from Liverpool, and are now, of course, still further reduced by the Canal route. The tunnel through the Andes makes a direct connection by railroad between Buenos Aires and Valparaiso, and there is an American railroad from Arica in the far north to Porto Montt in the far south, a recent feature making for extensive development, connecting Iquique, the principal export center, Santiago, Concepción, and other important cities.

The wealth of Chile comes from her nitrate fields, and the exports of nitrate of soda form 73 per cent of the total. Other Chilean exports which Massachusetts requires are wool, hides and skins, lime, copper, and iodine. Trade in these lines from Chile may be reciprocated by shipments from Massachusetts, not only of textiles, but also manufactures of machinery and tools, which are used to a considerable extent, electrical apparatus, quantities of our boots and shoes, with which she has already an extensive acquaintance, glazed kid, rubber goods, patent medicines, and paper.

Of the total exports from Chile, in 1913, $138,000,000, $25,000,000 worth were shipped to the United States, while of the total imports into that country, $122,000,000, the United States supplied only about fifteen per cent, or $17,000,000.

Colombia.

Colombia imports annually about $5,000,000 worth of cottons and, like Chile, seems to prefer American goods. Baranquilla, her chief port on the east side, is only 12 days from Boston as against 20 days from Liverpool, so that we have great advantages in quick service and freight charges. And these are needed, for after reaching Baranquilla there is the long Magdalena River-trip to the interior capital city, Bogotá, beautifully situated in one of the remarkable plateaus that are characteristic of South and Central America. Three means of travel have Can compete in price and quality. to be used for almost all transportation, viz., river lines, rail, and mules. Colombia is not a thickly inhabited country, but is destined to become so, for the land in these elevated valleys is well-watered and timbered, while the operation of the Canal, the building of railways, and the investment of capital are sure to make it at no distant date a section of great productiveness.

Colored goods, either dyed or printed, are in excellent demand in this market, and the importers could sell much more of our goods if they could have short lengths of ten yards each, with thirty-yard lengths of the favorite patterns, which here are well defined. Designs showing little white find the most favor. Solid blacks with tiny white spots are pleasing and small black squares on red, and vice versa, are always easily disposed of. A semi-glazed, inexpensive finish is required, because as yet the purchasing power of the people is not high. Our gray goods from Fall River find a ready sale, and are even imitated by the English manufacturers, but it will be easily demonstrated when the attention of the importer is called to our products that on almost all of the lines required our mills can compete in price, and give a better article. Here, too, is a large field for split prints to which, on account of the pressing demand, our manufacturers will give more than a passing share of attention.

On the west coast of Colombia, brought specially into prominence by the opening of the Canal, is the port of Buenaventura. This port enjoys a general 25 per cent reduction on import duty as an inducement to commerce, and it will be an important center in the future, when rail extensions into the interior have been effected.

Constant demand for machine tools and wire.

Boots and shoes, glazed kid, and findings for the domestic manufacture of shoes are among the principal imports which Massachusetts manufacturers will be interested in supplying. Machinery, machine tools, and wire are in constant demand; foods, such as hard breads and crackers, have an extensive sale, and our pork products are highly appreciated.

Our purchases from Colombia are coffee, — her chief article of export, — hides and skins, bananas, cocoanuts, and crude rubber. Of her total exports in 1913, $32,000,000, the United States took exactly one-half, or $16,000,000. Her total imports amounted to $23,964,000.

Venezuela.

Cotton goods form the most important item of Venezuelan imports, amounting now to about $4,000,000 annually. The larger importers in Venezuela have not heretofore been interested in American cotton goods, but the smaller German houses have taken kindly to our products, and have found great satisfaction in our gray sheetings and drills. There is demand also for cotton blankets, thread, and hosiery, for which all that is necessary is an acquaintance with the goods our manufacturers have to sell.

Cordage and twine are important items in Venezuelan trade, and the attention of importers is called to the excellent products of our Massachusetts mills as to the most extensive source of supply.

Machinery for the Venezuelan ship yards, machine tools, and wire are important needs. Sales of boots and shoes as well as upper leather and findings are extensive. Paper for wrapping, correspondence, and print has a steady demand, sales of confectionery are well represented, as are also those of lard, bacon, and ham.

The Venezuelan importers are very reliable, and there is added security for trade in the fact that the currency of the country is on a gold basis.

From Boston to La Guaira and Maracaibo, the main ports of the country, the trip is about eight days, and the freight charges are much lower than from Liverpool, from which it takes 18 days to ship goods. The capital, Caracas, like Bogotá in Colombia, is situated on a high plateau. Maracaibo, also an inland city, is reached by rail from the coast.

It must be admitted that in Venezuela there are the usual drawbacks of poor transportation facilities, and it should, therefore, be remembered that goods must be packed in bales of not over 125 pounds each, in order that the mules may not be overweighted. These beasts of burden can carry two 125-pound bales, one on either side, and only one bale if it weighs 150 pounds.

The grazing lands along the Orinoco River are unexcelled, furnishing food for large herds of cattle and goats. Cattle hides, therefore, and goatskins form important articles of export, second only to Venezuela's wonderful crops of coffee, cocoa, and crude rubber, all of which are now consumed to the extent of nearly half their value in the United States, our purchases from Venezuela in 1913 amounting to about $11,000,000 out of her total exports of $25,260,000. The imports in 1913 were $20,569,000.

Peru.

Peru is both a cotton growing and a cotton manufacturing country, although neither of these industries is carried on to any considerable extent, the native mills making principally gray sheetings and drillings with colored stripes. The annual imports of cotton goods are approximately $3,000,000, of which perhaps the largest single import is cotton trouserings.

These goods are similar to the familiar cottonades, plaids, and cassimeres, and offer the best opening for Massachusetts mills. A favorite design on this market in these goods is of gray warp and black filling making a small neat-appearing check. Our mills make quantities of goods in this line but they have been sold in the home market and have not as yet been brought to the attention of the importers.

Another material sold on every counter in Peru for which our Massachusetts mills could easily compete is printed flannelet, having a short nap on the under side. In these goods, stripes, and small designs are preferred. Plain-woven flannelet, 30 inch width, printed in stripes of blue and white, red and white, etc., or with scroll work and anchor design are in great demand among the native Indian women for bodices. Sometimes, for variety, they are printed heavily on the reverse side so that the figures strike through, giving a shadowy effect which is much admired. England sends Samples will bring sales and business. these goods, Germany and Spain also supply them, but Massachusetts manufacturers do not send samples and are perhaps not aware that they can, with a little effort, compete in price and quality. At all events, the importers say that while our goods are very salable, only a few of our samples reach them.

Peru, territorially, is a large country. Most of the people, some 4,500,000 in number, live in the Sierra region between the two parallel ranges of mountains wherein lies the source of the mineral wealth of the State. In the section lying to the east of the Andes, and drained by the Amazon, the tropical heat and heavy rainfalls unite to produce the world's greatest rubber forest, and crude rubber of the wild variety forms one of the principal articles of export.

Peru's commerce amounts to about $70,000,000 annually. The money of the country is on a gold basis, and the exports are copper, silver, gold, rubber, Peruvian cotton, wool, hides, and sugar—in total about $46,000,000. The principal imports, of which Massachusetts could supply a large proportion, are cotton and woolen goods, electrical and mining machinery, lard and other pork products, proprietary medicines, and preserved fish. The total imports in 1913 were approximately $25,000,000.

Lima, the capital, and Arequipa, are two splendidly modern cities. Practically all the inhabitants here wear the dress that we do, are good customers for shoes, and, generally speaking, have high purchasing power. There is no doubt but that the population will be augmented through immigration with the operation of the Canal, and the traffic of the country will be enormously increased. Americans now resident there are chiefly interested in the mines and the building of railways.

Bolivia.

Bolivia is an interesting country. Lying south of the Equator it has summer in the months of November, December, and January, and, land-locked between Brazil, Chile, and Peru, is obliged to carry on its commerce over these neighboring States through the ports of Antofagasta and Arica on the Pacific, and through Buenos Aires and Para on the Atlantic coast.

Bolivia's women have taste for colors.

Cotton goods imports into Bolivia now reach $1,000,000 annually, of which Germany usually supplies about one-half. From the United States the principal sales thus far have been Massachusetts drillings made principally in Fall River, which sell at a good price, and are satisfactory. The most densely populated section, Cochabamba, is high and comparatively cool, so that it occasions no surprise to find that the preference in print goods is for printed flannelet, napped a little on the under side. Our New Bedford mills make the kind of goods which have a wide sale in this line, and German importers will find on inspection a very large assortment of these goods, and a splendid line of cotton trouserings.

The dress of the Bolivians is very picturesque, a large part of the population, approximately one-fourth, being of the mixed white and Indian races. The women have a taste for colors, especially in stripes, pink and white being a general favorite. Fancy shoes are also in demand, with high heel, and a double row of buttons, and these are made up especially for this market by some of our enterprising Massachusetts manufacturers.

The wholesale trade is in the hands of the whites of Spanish descent, who form somewhat more than one-fourth of the population and have the highest purchasing power in the community. There are several Bolivian importing houses and one American, but the majority are German. It is, however, American capital which is operating to expand the railroads connecting with Argentina and with the Peruvian roads and opening up great resources in the country in minerals and in rubber.

The exports from Bolivia, amounting to about $35,000,000, are principally tin, silver, rubber, and copper, in the order given. Bolivia also leads the world in the export of bismuth. The United States is probably the final consumer of nearly all the Bolivian tin, although the export statistics give it as going one-half to London, and one-fourth to Germany, from which countries it has heretofore been largely re-exported to us. The Canal route will make it possible for Bolivia to send this important mineral by direct steamship lines to Boston.

Bolivian imports are principally railway materials, flour, cotton goods, upper leather, boots and shoes, and lumber, of which, in total about $19,000,000, only about half is now supplied by the United States.

Ecuador.

Like all other South American countries, cotton goods form the most important item of import into Ecuador, amounting to nearly $2,500,000 annually, out of a total of approximately $11,000,000 in imports, made up otherwise principally of food-stuffs, iron, and hardware. The trade in cotton manufactures has been principally with Great Britain, but many of the goods required in this market, such as gray sheeting, shirting, prints, cotton trouserings, and flannelets, are special products of Massachusetts mills, and here also is a demand for handkerchiefs and hosiery. This country, as well as Peru, Bolivia, and Chile, is now brought specially near us through the opening of the Canal, and it is expected that Massachusetts manufacturers will shortly be considering this territory quite within the home market.

All-over fancy prints in 30-inch widths are very popular, and it is quite true that many of the goods now supplied are Spanish and English imitations of American prints. The bulk of the gray goods, which is gray shirting, comes from England, and is inferior to Massachusetts standard makes which can be offered at competitive prices. Gingham, also a monopoly of Great Britain, can be offered in attractive designs to the importers, and there is good demand for fabrics for workingmen's wear, in which lines the Massachusetts mills excel, — for example, hickory shirting, pin-head checks, and stripes.

The Indian inhabitants wear shoes with a straw bottom and heel, and a toe of cotton duck. They also wear trousers of white shirting and over this a loose tunic perhaps of the same material, or a short jacket of drill, and a striped poncho. The Indian women wear scarlet, green, or purple skirts with shirtwaists of print or printed flannel, all of which cotton requirements we can supply in great variety, it being necessary only to popularize our goods. Other imports for which there is extensive sale are boots and shoes, glazed kid, engines and machinery, wire, bread and biscuits, and lard.

makers take Ecuador's cocoa.

The exports of Ecuador which Massachusetts uses in large quantities are cocoa for the basis of her chocolate manufactures, rubber, ivory nuts, Panama hats, coffee, gold, hides, and fresh fruits, in total $12,692,000. Guayaquil importers are strong financially, and as our goods are most satisfactory, there remains only the matter of long-term credits to be adjusted to the mutual satisfaction of dealers and exporters. Imports into the country, $11,489,000 in 1913, fairly balance the exports.

Uruguay.

Uruguay, though one of the smallest of the South American States, is also one of the most progressive. The imports of cotton goods alone form more than 10 per cent of the total imports and amount annually to over $5,000,000. The demand in this market is for manufactures of colored piece-goods, cotton flannel, flannelet, trouserings, stripes, prints, canvas blankets, hosiery, and undershirts, in all of which lines better acquaintance with Massachusetts products would increase our sales. The Massachusetts goods which are known on this market are liked so well that they set the standard for quality, — such materials, for example, as duck, canvas, denim, and Canton flannel. The reputation established for these goods, with only a limited number of sales, proves that a good trade could be built up if the market were given more attention on the part of our American exporters.

Uruguay also imports woolen goods, not to the same extent as cotton goods, but in sufficient quantities to make it worth while to send samples which, prices equal, should sell in the markets of Montevideo side by side with those of other countries, winning recognition on their merits as do the Massachusetts boots and shoes, which need no introduction to this distributing center. Our sales of harvester twine could be increased, for while the present amount is not large in total, it represents, nevertheless, nearly 80 per cent of all that is used in the country, and is each year increasing, as are also the sales of wire for cattle fencing and other purposes.

The exports of Uruguay, — practically equal to the imports, $50,000,000, — are wool, hides, beef, tallow, and sheepskins, the wealth of this fertile country being secured principally from its 20,000,000 sheep and somewhat less than half that number of cattle.

Paraguay.

Paraguay, with a population of nearly a million, although spoken of as the smallest of the South American Republics, has an area of 196,000 square miles, or twenty times that of the State of Massachusetts. The wealth of the country is in her forests which abound in dye woods, resinous trees, and hard wood for furniture, while red quebracho bark, extensively used for tanning purposes, yields a very large revenue. Much of the soil is well adapted for the cultivation of fruit and there are vast orchards of wild orange, but the development of agriculture is seriously retarded by the lack of good transportation facilities. Cattle raising is profitable and hides and beef form important articles of export.

Paraguay is a hot country and cotton goods form the principal articles of import. Massachusetts is now sending limited quantities of duck and canvas, but percales are in demand, white shirtings, cotton trouserings, inexpensive blankets made of cotton waste, and narrow split prints. As yet only a few of the natives wear boots and shoes, but the country is very progressive and the demand for them is increasing each year.

The total imports in 1913 amounted to $7,671,551, consisting, in addition to those already mentioned, of hardware, agricultural implements, revolvers, cartridges, and manufactures of iron and steel. Good demand for our firearms.

The exports, $5,462,001, are principally of quebracho bark, dry and salted hides, beef, tobacco, and oranges, and although according to the statistics, we take only a small portion of these exports, in reality a very much larger share than is apparent comes to us by transshipment from Argentina.

Cuba.

Fourth in rank in Latin-American countries in imports of cotton goods is the Republic of Cuba, the largest island in the Caribbean Sea. Being a warm country, cotton goods heads her list of imports, and the most recent data give the consumption as $9,278,430 annually, of which we supplied about 20 per cent, our proportion having gained steadily each year since the reciprocity treaty of 1903.

Cuba is for us the easiest and most accessible market, and Massachusetts is the natural point of supply for many of the Cuban requirements. For example, the Cuban letter carriers wear denim. Massachusetts can supply this material of a better grade of cotton, and in more pleasing colors than can be procured from any other source, and at competing prices. It is one of our special products to which the attention of purchasers is called.

In prints, the Cuban importer wants a large number of designs in a limited order of goods. If he wants it to look the same as better grades, but to be more cheaply constructed, — of coarser count, i.e., with fewer picks to the inch; — if, perhaps, he wants it a little different finish, we can not only meet his wishes, but we will make it a matter of business to find out what he wants beforehand. If he wants the labels on his goods changed so that he will not seem to be handling the same goods as his competitor, individual wishes in this matter will also receive attention.

The Massachusetts manufacturer enjoys in Cuba the very important advantages of preferential tariff, quick delivery, and cheap freight. The importers are strong financially, most of the houses being Spanish, but due allowance should be made for credit, since many of the goods are destined for the interior, where stock does not turn so rapidly as in the United States.

Standard prints can be counted on for delivery from Massachusetts in two or three weeks, and, if it is a special order, many of our mills have cloth on hand suitable for the Cuban market, and ready for immediate printing. Contrast with this the fact that from England the importer has to figure on four months, two to make up and two to deliver, from Spain at least eight weeks, while from Massachusetts, goods, even on special order, can be made and delivered inside of six weeks.

The salability of goods on the Cuban market frequently depends as much on appearance as on quality. It is not surprising, therefore, that possessing both appearance and quality, our goods have won their way into this market in response to a demand for them from the ultimate consumer, and many more of them could be sold if they were presented to the importers by agents who speak Spanish, that being the language of the island, while the men who control its business are Spaniards of high commercial integrity.

What is true of cottons is also true of Massachusetts boots and shoes which are in high favor in Cuba. There are only three native shoe factories, all in Havana, one of which produces 150 pairs a week, and even for these shoes we supply the lasts, upper leather, and findings. The sole leather used is the rather crude product of local tanneries, made without modern machinery, and the goods are sold in the interior towns.

Men's shoes are in specially good demand, and the American shapes rather than the former Spanish styles are constantly growing in popularity. In fact, we supply at present nearly 85 per cent of the demand. The native Cuban prefers low cut shoes, oxford, blucher, or button, while the Spaniard living on the island generally favors the high cut balmorals, blucher, and button. Both have small feet and fastidious taste in shoes. As with cottons, general appearance is appreciated first but workmanship counts in the Cuban market, and quality is imperative because the climate is very hard on leather. Few shoes are ever repaired, and the consumption is correspondingly increased, a single Massachusetts manufacturer who advertised extensively selling over 75,000 pairs in a recent year.

The Cuban women like a medium priced shoe with very light sole, close edges, medium pointed toe, high arch, and high heel. In tan shoes, only the light shades are worn by men and women, and our manufacturers have made this a special feature in supplying the Cuban trade, because tan shoes are worn the year round. Comparatively few high cuts for women are in demand, and the McKay and turned shoes have the preference over Goodyear welts.

Cuban foot is small, his shoe taste fastidious.

Besides textiles, and boots and shoes, Massachusetts' exports to Cuba consist principally of wearing apparel, electrical machinery, machine tools, belts and packing, rubber goods, fertilizers, manufactures of brass, and automobiles. The market also requires sugar machinery, paper, jewelry, and woolen goods, all awaiting our competition.

Our imports from Cuba greatly exceed our sales to her. In sugar alone, the United States imported $94,000,000 worth in 1913, and it is an interesting fact that the American-owned mills produced over a third of the total output. Tobacco leaf reached the $16,000,000 mark last year, while cigars and cigarettes contributed $4,000,000 more. These are the principal crops on which Cuba's wealth depends, — sugar and tobacco. Iron ore is found in great quantities, approximately four and one-half millions having been sold us in 1913. Of her pineapples and bananas, we consumed upwards of $2,000,000; of expensive woods, such as mahogany, $1,112,706 worth was imported; of cocoa, $329,836; and of hides and skins, $396,266. These items make up a very large part of her total exports which amounted in 1913 to approximately $165,000,000 as against total imports of about $144,000,000.

Porto Rico.

Porto Rico has a population of about 1,000,000 inhabitants. As with other tropical countries, the largest single import of the island is cotton goods, of which about $4,000,000 worth are now required annually. Light-weight bleached and printed goods, especially percales, muslins, and gingham, are general favorites, and the fine goods of our Massachusetts mills are preferred to those of other countries. The color most in fashion is pink. More pink goods are in demand than those of all other colors put together and the Porto Rican merchant, knowing the tastes of the community, makes his selections accordingly. Chambrays, light-weight gingham, checks, and seersuckers are also important features of the market, but the climate is too warm for flannelet.

In Porto Rico, as in Cuba, millions of bags are needed annually for the packing of raw sugar, but Massachusetts has not as yet supplied much of this demand which here amounts to more than a million dollars each year. American producers, with their advantage under the reciprocity treaty, should be able to supply this market with nearly every line of cotton goods desired.

The need for boots and shoes in Porto Rico has greatly increased since it became customary for school children—nearly 90,000 in number in urban districts,—to wear them. Laborers on the island are also beginning to wear shoes, for physicians affirm that bare feet are the cause of anemic affection, and a change in the law is contemplated by which all persons will be compelled to wear foot covering. Canvas shoes can be worn the year round, and Massachusetts' manufacturers should not be misled by the short home season in this particular, and should send quantities of these goods, of which there are not nearly enough to supply the need. The Porto Ricans want the best, demanding high-grade shoes, slippers, and dancing pumps.

The waters of Porto Rico supply fish in abundance, but as fish decay quickly in warm climates, and as cold-storage facilities are not so common even in the cities, there is a good demand for our dried and salted fish from Gloucester and Boston.

Paper forms an item of considerable importance among the imports, as do also jewelry, fertilizers, and manufactures of iron and steel. The purchasing power of the people of Porto Rico is increasing daily and has already trebled since the island became American property. Porto Ricans depend entirely on agriculture, the main crop being sugar-cane, and of her exports, raw sugar forms about two-thirds. Then there are tobacco and fruits which are marketed principally in the United States.

The internal transportation facilities of the island are good. San Juan, the principal port of commerce, maintains direct connection with Boston, with weekly service. Business with Porto Rico is simplified because American currency is used everywhere, although Spanish is the language of the island, and salesmen speaking Spanish are business assets.

Jamaica.

The import of cotton goods into Jamaica, the largest island of the West Indies, is approximately $2,000,000 worth annually ($1,943,198). The only nations participating in this trade are Great Britain and the United States, the former securing three-fourths and the latter only one-fourth of this commerce. While the island belongs to England politically, it is closely connected with the United States both geographically and commercially, and it has been so long an objective point for American tourists, that American influence is very perceptible in the business methods and tastes of the people.

The great bulk of the cotton goods needed in Jamaica is of cheap quality for sale to the negroes, but there is also an increasing demand for the finer grades of American goods among the wealthy inhabitants. The demand covers prints, gray sheetings, fine white goods, khaki, coarse stripes, tickings, and cotton trouserings, as well as specialties in blankets, bedspreads, towels, and hosiery.

The Jamaica market is peculiar. There are fixed prices at which goods are sold, for instance, six, nine, twelve, and twenty-four cents per yard, respectively, with no intermediate gradations. If American goods are quoted at less than four cents, they may be sold at a profit in Jamaica for six cents a yard, but if, owing to fluctuations in the price of raw cotton, the price quoted rises to four and a half cents, they cannot be sold for six cents, and consequently must be moved up to the nine-cent class. If, as usually happens, it is impossible to jump the price from six cents to nine cents, and make sales, cheaper goods must be substituted, for the one thing certain is that the customary prices will not be changed.

The English meet this difficulty by cheapening the quality, i.e., weaving more openly, and filling with starch to the required weight, thus permitting their goods to be sold at the accustomed price, while our mills prefer, and perhaps properly so, to maintain their standard of quality, irrespective of the price, and of the fact that they lose the sales. For this is what happens: When high cost of cotton pushes prices above normal, the importers drop the American lines and fall back on the goods which suit the needs of the trade. While it is highly commendable in our mills not to lower the quality of standard goods, it is undoubtedly a fact that the limited means of the people, not only in Jamaica, but in many of the Latin-American countries, quite often necessitate a line of cheaper goods. An entirely new American enterprise turning out a somewhat less expensive grade of goods, and particularly one which would manufacture split prints awaits a profitable investment of capital. Notwithstanding the disadvantages, however, many of the prints sold on this market are of American manufacture, as is also most of the gray sheeting. The experience of the importers in Jamaica proves that we can compete strongly on gray sheetings and drill, duck and canvas, standard prints, denims, blue drills, and coarse stripes, and to some extent on gingham, domets, and cotton blankets. On cheap shirts for men's wear (made up cotton goods) we are also securing a stronger foothold on the market. In fact, as a whole, American goods are liked the best, and they deserve more intensive advertising.

Jamaica enjoys much quicker service, and more frequent connection with our Atlantic ports than with Liverpool, so that a voyage from Boston involves only four and a half or five days as against twenty-one days from England, partly because English steamers stop at the other British West Indies to distribute their cargoes, — namely, at Trinidad, Barbados, the Windward and Leeward Islands, and the Bahamas, whose combined imports of cottons aggregated upwards of $1,000,000 in 1913. The total population of these islands is 1,749,839.

In the matter of British West Indian exports, the United States takes a much larger share than England and all other foreign countries put together, practically 60 per cent coming to us in the form of bananas, cocoa-nuts, oranges, grapefruit, and pimentos, as well as purchases of rum, coffee, and sugar.

Imports exceed those of country.

In all of the British West Indies, the importation of shoes is important, our styles are very popular and the bright tan colors are in high favor. Vastly more of our shoes could be sold in this market with comparatively little effort. This is true also of machinery and tools.

Jamaica is only 90 miles south-east of Cuba. It is about 1,100 miles from Boston, and 5,000 miles from England.

Mexico.

Although Mexico is a cotton growing and a cotton manufacturing country, she imports annually over $9,000,000 worth of cotton goods. The government encourages home industry by a high tariff, but the demand for cotton goods increases much more rapidly than the output of the native mills.

The climate of Mexico is not specially adapted to the manufacture of cotton; the raw material costs more than in Massachusetts; machinery, mill supplies, and coal have to be imported, and labor in proportion to the output is high. The domestic mills, therefore, confine themselves principally to making the coarser varieties of cloth, since on finer goods they cannot compete in price for obvious reasons. The Mexican importer, nevertheless, is appreciative of fine goods, and will be specially interested in the large variety of attractive prints and colored goods which Massachusetts mills have to display, and in the nicer grades of gray and bleached goods which the market requires. Yarns are also in demand in fine and medium grades, and for these, we can frequently quote prices cheaper than the spinning cost at their domestic mills.

The manufacture of boots and shoes is as yet only an infant industry in Mexico, and the annual imports amount to nearly two million dollars, of which we supply approximately 80 per cent. Shoes of American manufacture are preferred to other types, and, as the Mexican market requires attention to small details and matters of finish, our Massachusetts shoes find favor because they excel in these particulars. In shoes for men, the American shapes are nearly always preferred, while in shoes for women, the preference is for a medium or light-weight flexible turned-sole shoe with high instep and medium pointed toe, Louis XV, or Spanish heel. Our Lynn factories make a specialty of these shoes for the Mexican trade, and for American women living there who desire the characteristics of the distinctively American shoe, the heavier weight sold to our domestic trade has proved generally more acceptable.

Some of the local shoe factories, of which there are perhaps a dozen or more, turn out a shoe according to our style, which compares very favorably with the original American pattern. The uppers of patent leather, dressed kid, and calf are imported from the United States, with some from Germany, and the sole leather is tanned locally, principally at Mazatlan on the west coast.

Quite a few of our Massachusetts factories are now specializing in cut upper leathers as well as in lasts and shoe findings, and, as the duty on these articles is purposely low in order to help out the Mexican manufacturer, he will appreciate the accessibility of goods in these lines especially from Boston and Lynn. As a matter of fact, however, the high tariff on the completed article has not at all restricted our sales of shoes, owing to their superior fit, finish, and wearing qualities and the demand for them from the ultimate consumer.

In addition to our textiles and our boots and shoes, machinery for manufacturing these goods is next in demand, as well as mining machinery and fine tools. Occupying contiguous territory, Mexico buys all sorts of merchandise across the border, the total exports from the United States in 1913 amounting to more than $52,000,000.

Uncle Sam is

Chief among these needs which Massachusetts can supply, besides those already mentioned, are firearms, automobiles, cars, rubber goods, and wire. Made-up clothing in cotton and wool, foodstuffs in the shape of apples, pork products, and patent medicines have also an extensive sale. Our exports to Mexico will be more than outbalanced by our purchases of her cattle hides, goatskins, sisal grass and other fibres, copper, coffee, and beef.

Central America.

The total imports of cotton goods in the seven Central American republics taken collectively amount approximately to $8,000,000 annually. Great Britain provides the chief source of supply to all, except the Republics of Costa Rica and Honduras, where her share drops to one-third of the requirements, leaving the United States practically in control of the trade.

Panama.

The republic of Panama, though the farthest distant of the Central American States, is, of course, the one most closely connected and most easily accessible, especially to the Atlantic ports of the United States, and the country is daily increasing in importance. We buy practically her entire crop of bananas, the chief, if not the only article of export, and, generally speaking, we supply something over one-half of her requirements principally in foodstuffs and iron and steel with considerable quantities of cotton goods. In cotton goods, however, owing to the fact that only a limited number of varieties of Massachusetts goods have been presented, our share is not nearly what it could be made. The superiority of weave and the variety of designs in our print goods are matters of appreciation among the sojourners in Panama, of whom there are many, as well as among the natives; and — a rather unusual claim for American goods, — the colors seem to withstand the rainy climate better than the prints from Europe. The latter goods are nearly always of the cheaper starched classes which are not specially desirable in a damp atmosphere, and it will be surprising if our better grades of cotton goods do not eventually command a ready sale.

Massachusetts gray goods, for the same climatic reason, are in high favor because they are all cotton, finished without sizing or clay. Our khaki and denim are well known, but our muslins, white goods, and knit underwear, for which there is a good demand, need to be called to the attention of the importers.

Quantities of boots and shoes are needed here, nearly all classes wearing American styles. Our light tan shades will withstand the weather and prove attractive. Importers will be repaid also for examining our lines in rubber shoes and rubber clothing.

Electrical machinery and apparatus, structural iron and steel, builders' hardware, pipes and fittings, are only a few of the things needed by the Panamans which Massachusetts can supply, and in the line of food our pork products do not fear competition.

Panama imports, approximately $10,000,000, are more than five times her exports, and money is constantly flowing out of the country, but, in addition to the receipts from the export of bananas, the country has a guaranteed income of $250,000 annually in rental for the Canal, and the $10,000,000 cash which was originally paid to the Republic of Panama for the rights and privileges conferred in the Canal Zone, — the reserved strip of territory ten miles wide, five miles on either side of the center of the Canal, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The supplies for this territory are purchased in the United States, and sold only to Canal employees, their requirements being about $5,000,000 worth annually.

The distance from Boston to the Canal is some 450 miles nearer than from New York and is 1,225 miles nearer than from San Francisco. The sailings from Boston are direct and regular and afford many advantages for shipping in comparison with any other Atlantic or Pacific port.

Guatemala.

Guatemala, the largest republic in Central America, has somewhat over 2,159,000 inhabitants, and imports cotton goods annually to the extent of about one dollar per capita, or upwards of two millions of dollars. The requirements in cottons are supplied to the extent of one-half the total by England, one-fourth by the United States, and one-fifth by Germany, but since almost the entire demand in this market is for piece goods that are staple articles in Massachusetts, viz. — gray goods, drills, and prints, — more of our samples should be presented to the importers, and our sales could be enormously increased. England supplies all of the cotton thread, and about three-fourths of the cotton yarn used by the natives for hand loom weaving.

American
salesmen are outnumbered ten to one.

There is no special reason why any of these goods should be supplied by distant European countries, since the qualities preferred are our regular standard makes. No reason is apparent except that there has been no persistent effort on the part of our manufacturers and exporters to popularize our sales, as is evidenced by the fact that the travelling salesmen of England and Germany outnumber those of America ten to one. This market does not demand the cheapest goods, and on our pure-sized gray sheetings, the English cannot compete in price, but they can and do imitate the American goods, and even label their products, "Manta Americano." By putting in less cotton and more size, they are able to sell them at about the same price as standard American goods. Germany controls the market for knit goods, and the American knit-goods manufacturer has yet to introduce his goods in this and other Central American markets.

The tale of Guatemala's foreign commerce is practically told when we say Guatemala exports coffee and imports textiles, of which cottons are the important feature, the total exports approaching $13,157,000, and the imports $9,823,000. In Guatemala, American prints are preferred on account of the variety of patterns, so the enterprising European manufacturers purchase a few of these for samples, and then make up similar patterns of inferior goods. As a matter of fact, on sheetings, drills, and standard prints, we could put goods on this market as cheap or cheaper than any other country, were it not for the facts that the importing houses are principally branch connections of English or German establishments, and that many of them will not handle American goods, consequently the need for resident agents of Massachusetts mills will be appreciated.

Guatemala has the only cotton mill in Central America, and as that has only a little over 6,000 spindles, it will obviously be a long time before any of these countries can be independent of outside sources.

Salvador.

Salvador holds second place in Central America in the matter of cotton goods imports, the amount being similar to that of Guatemala approximating $2,000,000 annually, and representing a relatively larger amount per capita. Though Salvador is the smallest of the sister states in area, she is relatively the most densely populated, having upwards of a million and a half inhabitants.

England monopolizes the market for cottons, supplying nearly 60 per cent of the total, while the United States sends about 28 per cent, principally in unbleached piece goods with limited quantities of prints. The demand there is for a cheap print, and the American prints are somewhat too high-priced for the purchasing power of the people. The gray goods on this market, of which there are large imports, are 28 inches wide, and retail for about six cents a yard. This requirement could be entirely supplied by our mills if an effort were made to get it, for competitive prices could be offered which would establish forever the superiority of American goods.

Salvador is on the Pacific, and goods are shipped by way of the Canal with railroad connections to San Salvador, the capital. Machinery, boots and shoes, cut upper leather, and findings represent the principal requirements, and coffee is the chief article among the exports, of which the total in 1913 was $9,942,000. The imports amounted to approximately $6,775,000.

Costa Rica.

The imports of Costa Rica in cotton goods now amount to nearly a million dollars a year, of which the United States supplies a larger share than usual, approximately 33 per cent. Although having the smallest population among the republics, Costa Rica is a most progressive and peaceful country. The standard of living and the purchasing power of the people have reached a relatively high level, the currency of the country is on a stable gold basis, and the banking facilities are good. Moreover, we maintain a weekly steamship service from Boston.

Weekly
steamers should help
Boston trade.

The cheap starched English prints are not salable in this market, perhaps because there are many Americans in Costa Rica and American goods are popular. We also supply practically all the gray goods, but Great Britain has the trade in colored goods, and Germany in knit goods, two lines in which Massachusetts is able to offer competitive prices. Ranking next to cotton goods and ready made clothing of cotton, boots and shoes form an important item of import within easy reach of the Massachusetts manufacturer to supply. Port Limon on the Atlantic and Puntarenas on the Pacific are busy centers, and of the exports of the country, amounting to upwards of $10,000,000 annually, one-half is taken by the United States. They consist of bananas, coffee, gold, silver, hard woods, hides, skins, and cocoa. Imports practically balance exports, $10,187,000 in 1913.

Honduras.

Honduras has a population of about 600,000. There is not even hand manufacturing done here, and the country depends wholly on other nations for the clothing of the inhabitants.

The main imports are prints, gray goods, colored goods, and white goods, and our share is constantly increasing. We send the denim used by the army, made up specially in 24-inch width. The same narrow width is required for the gray sheeting in extensive use for clothing, the wider goods being as yet too expensive for this market.

Honduras owes the development of the banana industry along the Atlantic coast entirely to Americans, and this, with cattle raising, comprises practically the extent of the present industrial activity.

Banana industry developed by Americans.

The United States absorbs 86 per cent of the exports of the country, which consist principally of bananas, minerals, coffee, hides, and cattle, and amount in total to about $3,080,000. The trade is in the hands of a few Honduras merchants who are able to pay, so that there is little financial difficulty, and, owing to the fact that it takes five or six months to get goods from England, it is quite likely that with the opening of the Canal, Massachusetts goods will be in extensive demand. Transportation facilities are still greatly needed into the interior, however, the only way being over rough trails by mules, which makes the packing of goods in bales of proper size a matter of importance. All merchandise destined for the capital, Tegucigalpa, go by way of Panama to the port of Amapola, boots and shoes and machinery, next to cotton goods, having the greatest demand. Bananas to the extent of two and a half million dollars annually are the important export, with smaller quantities of hides and skins. The imports in 1913 were, in round numbers, $4,317,000.

Nicaragua.

Here, as in the other Central American countries, cotton goods are the chief imports amounting to nearly $1,000,000 annually, of which England furnishes upwards of 60 per cent, and the United States approximately 25 per cent. Other foreign countries, principally Germany, are represented only to a slight degree. Up to this time, there has been no effort made to extend our trade with this country, owing to the very serious fluctuations of exchange. Sales of cotton goods have thus far been confined to cities on the Atlantic seaboard, but the opening of the Canal will now make trade possible with the principal cities on the west coast, Leon, Managua, and Granada, where as yet very few American cottons have been displayed in the stores.

The inexpensive 20 to 24 inch cottons in colored and dyed goods are the principal imports, then prints and gray goods. There is a limited sale of denims for clothing such as is worn in coats by the Nicaraguan soldiers in combination with trousers of Turkey red.

Natives respond to influence of Americans.

As in the other Central American countries, most of the development enterprises, such as building railroads and docks, operating mines, etc., are undertaken by outside capital, in this instance usually American, and through contact with these pioneers of progress, the natives are gradually coming to experience much higher purchasing power and daily increasing needs.

The United States takes nearly one-half of the exports of Nicaragua, amounting to about $3,000,000, composed of coffee, hard woods, and minerals, with smaller amounts of rubber and bananas. The imports in 1913 were approximately $5,966,000.

Canada.

The people of Canada have so much in common with those of the United States that that country really seems to be a part of our own domain. Differences of language, of currency, of customs are practically non-existent, no inconsiderable portion of the population being emigrants from the United States with whom trade is a matter of course. Notwithstanding a comparatively high preferential tariff on cotton goods of English manufacture, we are annually increasing our exports in this and in a hundred other lines.

Canada has home manufacture of cotton goods to a considerable extent, and the mills are enlarging their capacity, but they are not able to keep up with the increasing quantity and variety of goods demanded by a constantly growing population. The domestic mills confine themselves to cloths of coarse or medium grade, leaving the finer grades and specialties to be supplied from outside sources. In the line of fine knitting yarns Massachusetts mills can offer substantial competition, and effectively extend their trade.

The Massachusetts designs in prints are more novel and of immensely greater variety than print goods of English manufacture, and thus have already established themselves both because the Canadian taste is pleased with our goods, especially in the finer lines, and because of quicker shipments. Even though the home mills make gray goods, the attention of importers is called to our Fall River and New Bedford products than which there are none of superior quality produced anywhere in the world, and which can be sold at competitive prices.

Our boots and shoes need no introduction to Canadian stores, but there are some special lines which will be of interest to purchasers, in shoes for rough wear which are particularly suited to the great grain-growing section of Western Canada, a country only just developing. In the last half decade, this section has gone forward in progress by leaps and bounds, and the extensive investments of American capital and the large number of Americans in Canada stimulated by emigration to the North West make for still further development each year, and a trade more domestic than foreign. New towns are being built; Vancouver is becoming a port of importance for the shipment of grain, and it is highly probable that the new water route will take care of this immense source of wealth instead of having it hauled over land as formerly.

Here in the United States we are able to supply more of Canada's needs than all other countries put together, goods to the extent of over $300,000,000 being sent to her in 1913. Raw cotton, cotton goods, and boots and shoes, by no means exhaust our stock. Canada needs agricultural implements, wire for fencing, fertilizers, and binder twine, which Massachusetts can supply. Automobiles, electrical apparatus, textile and boot and shoe machinery, fine tools, pipe and fittings, hardware, and similar goods are constantly required. Writing paper, books, music, jewelry, pianos, cigars, confectionery, and pork products, are all in the list of Canadian requirements, for which Massachusetts can supply competitive goods.

Return cargoes of boards, plank, and wood pulp from the abundant supply of her vast forests, crops of hay, grain, and flaxseed, hides, skins, and dairy products readily facilitate a healthy reciprocal commerce.

Australia.

Next in importance to improving our trade with the Latin-American countries and with Canada, the Panama Canal opens up the possibility of enormously extending our commerce in the very attractive field of Australia, in which market the Massachusetts manufactures have already a generous recognition. Her total imports from all sources amount to about $250,-000,000, annually. Like other countries, a heavy item in the Australian budget of imports is that of cotton goods which now amount annually to approximately $15,000,000.

Rich market and well disposed toward
goods.

The Australian demands in cotton goods are of the kinds which are standard products in our Massachusetts mills, and our manufacturers will welcome the opportunity to display them advantageously. Take, for example, our denims which have already made their way there and which by chance happened to be what the Australian clothing manufacturer was pleased to think the proper width for his work. They are used in carrying on a most successful business in the making of goods for workingmen's wear which sell most satisfactorily. If our manufacturers could guarantee a steady price per yard without variation for six months at a time, the sale of American denims alone would insure an important business, and we are making an effort to bring about this desirable condition of trade. Sheetings, shirtings, prints, drills, flannels, and flannelets are all in order in this market, and our trade in its possibilities is great enough to warrant any change in width, length, design, or any other suggested improvement, which the Australian importers may consider essential.

Gray goods, of which we make such quantities, are extensively used for the manufacture of bags, for linings for clothing, for boot and shoe findings, and for an unlimited number of other household uses, and the durability of the goods from our Fall River mills will be appreciated.

Ducks are popular on the market. They are used for the manufacture of tarpaulins, for blankets for horses and cattle, and for various other purposes. American goods are favorites, and if a 72-inch width in a little cheaper quality were put on the market, an urgent need would be supplied. The demand grows for solid colors in denim, indigo, seal brown, and gray, in addition to the well known blue and white.

In prints, the Australian market wants 27 to 30 inch widths, and our manufacturers who have heretofore considered width an unimportant matter will now give it the attention it deserves, offering most attractive designs and competitive prices. Cloths for the covering of cheese and butter, which are staple articles of export in Australia, as well as for the covering of beef, have a very extensive sale, and the Australian merchant will have pleasure in looking up special goods from our New Bedford and Lowell manufacturers.

Our boots and shoes are a standing need in Australia. As a matter of fact the native factories turn out shoes made of leather imported from Massachusetts, for while they have plenty of hides and skins, from the enormous number of cattle and sheep which are raised, Australians do not seem to be able to get a good finish on leather, although they strive to imitate "American goods." The high minimum wage necessary under the law also operates to raise the price of domestic shoes so that we can export and pay the high tariff imposed as cheaply as they can make them locally. Going hand in hand with imports of shoes our shoe blackings have a very good demand.

Our sales of automobiles are a constant source of surprise.

American
motor cars are given the preference.

The local dealers used to think the European car was the only one worth importing, but our light built gasoline cars have secured a strong hold on the market because of their cheapness, durability, and economy of operation. There is a growing demand also for the higher priced cars owing to satisfactory endurance tests, and for auto trucks, for Australia being a country of large distances, often without adequate railroad connections, finds ample use for this effective means of transportation.

Australia with all the needs of a new and growing country has a lively interest in our firearms, fine machine tools, scientific instruments, electrical machinery and apparatus, wire for brushes and cattle fencing, rubber goods, and paper. In its temperate climate, articles of clothing, confectionery, and heat supplying foods are appreciated. Preserved fish is a special requirement of the country and our Gloucester salt fish will not be overlooked by the importers who appreciate the value of a salable article. Cheese and butter and beef will make profitable return cargoes. Wool from the great Sydney wool market may be taken in unlimited quantities for our textile mills, hides and skins, additional sources of Australian wealth and Massachusetts' needs, may be returned, and tin and copper can be utilized in our manufactures of metal. The total exports of the country are upwards of $300,000,000.

The Philippine Islands.

Since the readjustment of the tariff providing for the free entry of American goods, the United States has led all countries in supplying the demand for cotton goods in the Philippines, the total sent in 1913 aggregating approximately $6,000,000 ($5,848,440).

Four classes of cloths are imported, namely, — white shirtings, white drills and ducks, Swiss muslins, and prints. The Filipinos want plain prints, and Turkey red, and these we have been shipping, but there are possibilities in other lines which we should easily supply such as white drills, ducks, ginghams, plaids, and checks.

White is universally worn in the Philippines. The tropical climate permits the wearing of one weight cloth the year round, and large numbers of men wear no other material than white shirting at any time for trousers, shirts, and underclothing.

A favorite dress for men is trousers of Turkey red with a white unbelted shirt, and vice versa. Turkey red is also worn by the women for skirts, and the regular costume of the native women is a printed calico skirt with a "sarong," or loose fold of striped pattern around the waist tucked in at the belt, and a shirtwaist of Swiss muslin. The striped sarong is imported from Spain. The Turkey red is the product of our American mills, and is purchased because it gives better value to the consumer, is made of good cotton, fast color, not so heavily sized as the English variety, and fully as cheap. The Massachusetts prints are also specially suited to the popular taste and we are able to supply an infinite variety of cambrics, chambrays, sateens, etc., in the bright colors which seem to be a characteristic of the country.

New standards of living have made trade.

Another cloth of large import is white drill for men's suits, worn alike by both native and foreign residents, as is also white cotton duck which is next in favor. Khaki imported from England is used by the Filipino troops, and to a considerable extent by civilians for travelling and rough wear, and our Massachusetts samples in this line should not be overlooked.

Large quantities of cotton trouserings, some of them napped on the under side, have a successful sale, and mosquito netting is a necessity.

Plain bleached goods have also here the customary uses for sheets, pillow slips, and other household purposes, and the attention of the importers is called to the specialties in fine goods from our New Bedford and Northbridge mills which will probably prove to be exactly what they wish to buy.

Before the American occupation, the Filipinos, both men and women, pattered round in loose slippers fastened by a toe strap, and no hose, but the standard of living has changed, and nearly all are now wearing shoes and stockings. Consequently the demand for hosiery is increasing daily, and our Massachusetts manufacturers should make an early entrance into competition for these as well as other knit goods. There is also a good market, but a special one, which would pay Massachusetts manufacturers, in colored yarns for use in the native hand looms, the lots to be put up in assorted colors, since only a limited amount of each is used in combination with the native fibres which abound in the country and make up so attractively. These fibres form one of the principal exports of the Philippines, and are used extensively in our Massachusetts mills, which consumed nearly $10,000,000 worth in 1913, for the manufacture of rope and twine.

Sugar is one of our extensive purchases from the Philippines, as are also fruits and nuts, and manufactures of tobacco. Besides our cotton goods and manufactures of clothing, and boots and shoes already mentioned, we are sending to the Philippines, hams, lard, and bacon, confectionery, automobiles, firearms, machine tools, writing paper and envelopes, nails, builders' hardware, and structural iron and steel.

Great diversity in exports to Philippines.

Hawaii.

Hawaii, the largest island in the Mid-Pacific, one of a group of nine islands bearing that name, is about 2,000 miles from San Francisco and is an important port of call for trans-Pacific steamers.

The resources of these islands are almost exclusively agricultural, the main crop being sugar cane. The soil, less favorable for this product than that of Cuba, has to be assisted through fertilization and irrigation, over $1,000,000 in imports of fertilizer being registered from the United States in 1912.

The purchasing power of the islands is relatively high because of the population, 191,000 in 1912, 64 per cent of the men, immigrants from Portugal, Spain, Russia, the Philippines, Japan, and other countries, are engaged principally in the sugar industry. Stimulated by the reciprocity treaty operative with the islands since 1876, the sugar crop increased from 12,540 tons to 260,079 tons in 1898, and since the annexation to the United States in that year, the output has more than doubled, 595,258 tons being exported in 1912 valued at $49,961,509. The canal route will enable us to secure this raw sugar by direct shipment to the Atlantic coast which has heretofore been transported by rail through Mexico.

Ranking second to sugar, the cultivation of pineapples is important, the exports, raw, preserved, and in the form of fruit juice, reaching $2,567,000 in 1912. There are also exports of molasses, coffee, and tobacco. Most of the business, both purchase and sale, is done with the United States, the imports consisting of cotton goods, boots and shoes, bacon and hams, automobiles, and manufactures of iron and steel. The islands are aptly termed the "cross roads of the Pacific," and commerce with other countries will probably now be developed to a considerable extent.

India.

The ships of England sail the waters of the globe with her manufactures of cotton, but nowhere in the world is there an outlet for her goods like that of India. India consumes about one-third of all the cotton cloth exported from England, and of all her holdings in markets, this is the one which Great Britain could least afford to lose. Massachusetts cotton goods producers, who have not yet begun to make an aggressive campaign, although they have manufacturing facilities for competing anywhere in the world, ought not to overlook this promising field. One of the main things needed for its cultivation is a direct line from Boston to Bombay, and thence to Singapore, Bombay being nearer to the United States than are Shanghai and other Chinese ports to which we ship our goods.

India has cotton mills, many of them. They contain upwards of 5,000,000 spindles. And India raises much raw cotton, in this respect she is second only, though not a close second, to the United States. More than that, it is to her credit to say that she manufactures a larger proportion of her cotton crop than does the United States, and that she exports relatively more in manufactures of cotton than does the United States, mainly in the form of coarse yarn, China being the chief purchaser to an extent of $47,000,000 annually. The explanation of all this lies in the fact that India has approximately 300,000,000 people, and that cotton is the chief material used for clothing. The native mills and the hand loom combined, for the hand loom flourishes here even more than in China, produce less than enough for one-third of her inhabitants, and the value of imports in cotton goods amounts to $125,000,000 annually; $115,000,000 coming from Great Britain as against $1,121,013 in 1913 from the United States.

Massachusetts should supply in this market a large share of drills, prints, shirtings, and even dhooties which are the typical Indian garments. These are generally manufactured in the medium grade of cotton goods, and American cotton only is considered suitable for producing the quality desired in these garments. The native Indian mills do not compete except in the very coarse varieties of cloth, and those not furnished by England are made on the Indian hand looms, using English spun yarn made of American cotton.

Can meet
cheap labor with quality of goods.

The great advantage of the Indian mills is in the cheapness of their material and their labor, but there is a great disadvantage in the poor quality of their cotton crop. The staple is coarse and not a clear white, for which reason, on all the lighter and finer goods, we can easily offer competition. Such goods as we now send to India are invariably transhipped in England. Trade could be enormously increased by direct service sending cargoes of American cotton, tools, and textile machinery, for which there would be a good demand if brought to the attention of the Indian manufacturers. Our trade with India amounts annually to some $45,000,000, and we send to her in general merchandise only about $7,500,000, leaving a balance of five times this amount to be paid in cash, whereas, if we could send our products in exchange, we could retain our gold, and at the same time stimulate many of our important Massachusetts industries.

Russia.

This country of enormous proportions, one-seventh of the earth's surface, and with 160,000,000 population, is one of our best sources of supply for raw materials, the market for Russian products being right at home in our capital city, Boston. Russia is a great hide and wool producing country. Hides of calves, of cattle, of sheep, and of goats are her principal articles of export, and we need these in our leather and shoe industries, because we do not produce enough ourselves. Some of these hides and skins cannot be duplicated elsewhere, for example, the hide of the Russian horse, the horse of the Cossack and the Tartar, which is of very peculiar character. "For centuries he has been inured to the hardships of a Russian winter, sleeping out in the snow until he has developed a coat of skin and hair which no other horse possesses." This is the hide, — so thick and firm that it positively will not stretch, which makes the only covering for baseballs which will withstand very hard batting, and it is obtainable nowhere but in Russia. It is the kind of horse, too, that produces the furred pony coat, so much used for winter garments and automobile wear.

Our Russian carpet wools come from sheep grown in the valley of the Don and in Russian Asia, nothing like them being produced at home. We need these wools for our carpet industry and we imported $3,500,000 of them in 1912. Then there is the kind of wool skin that we call astrakhan, the skin of the astrakhan lamb, found only in southern Russia and rivaling sealskin in popularity for luxurious winter garments.

Russia is the "greatest fur-producing country in the world. The only reason we do not associate exports of fur with that country is because the skins are not dressed and dyed in Russian territory, being sent to Leipsic, to London, or to Paris for treatment, — and, the fur garments being made up in these cities, they naturally figure as the exports of Germany, of England, and of France. Direct service with Russia would bring these furs much more cheaply to our markets.

We import quantities of flax from Russia, more than a million dollars in 1912, and altogether our imports of goods from that country amount to about $150,000,000 annually.

Our exports to Russia are rather difficult to determine, for the reason that the statistics take no account of transshipments, and only about $26,000,000 are credited as being cleared for Russian ports. As a matter of fact, however, much the larger proportion of our products which finally reach her go to Amsterdam, Antwerp, Hamburg, Bremen, Hull, or Marseilles and are there transshipped, making them appear as exports from Holland, Belgium, Germany, England, or France.

Among these may be mentioned some $9,000,000 in agricultural implements in 1913, Russia being our best customer of any nation in the world. Her crop of flax is exchanged with us for $1,000,000 of binder twine for her harvests. She imports rubber goods, — hose, rubber boots, divers' apparatus, everything that we make in the rubber line has a good market in Russia. Bolts, hinges, door knobs, and hardware of all kinds for building are imported in large quantities. Our fine tools are in great favor and projects for manufacturing them in Russian territory under the supervision of Massachusetts managers have been discussed.

Trade with Russia larger than export
indicate.

Our automobiles, the ones tested for strength and endurance, are just suited to the roads in Russia, outside of the cities, for like some of our western states, the country districts are not always thickly populated enough to take good care of the roads. They need machines built to go through great stretches of rather rough and often muddy territory, and, therefore, need cars supplied with good springs to meet the conditions.

Boots and shoes are being sent to Russia in larger quantities each year. There is a market for long boots for the Russian peasant, because in the country they have mud in summer and snow in winter. If he cannot afford shoes of leather, the average peasant wraps his feet and legs with a "partianka," a strip of unbleached cotton in lieu of a stocking and wears a sandal made from the lining of the bark of the linden tree. The upper classes, and the people of the cities, of course, wear shoes and there are several shoe factories and a rapidly growing business. American shapes are the only kind Russians will buy and there are quite a few stores located in Petrograd and Moscow which are supplied from our Brockton and Lynn factories.

The cotton goods imports into Russia are not very important, because Russia is herself the fourth cotton-producing country in the world, Turkestan and the Caucasus district having climatic conditions suitable for the production of cotton. Notwithstanding this, however, and the fact that her manufactures of cotton goods are extensive, she is a very large purchaser of raw cotton, taking annually nearly $50,000,000 of our southern crop for admixture with her own cotton staple which is rough and hard, similar to the East Indian variety. American cotton seed has been planted in Russia with good results, but careful cultivation is necessary, to prevent its going back to the coarse variety of the indigenous product. Most of the native mills make gray and bleached coarse sheeting and chintz for household uses and for curtains. Napped goods printed in Persian colors, of twill construction, are used for shirts and dresses to take the place of wool in winter, and cotton waste is utilized in making the coarser counts and cheaper fabrics. Red is a favorite color as are also solid blue and indigo.

The duties on cotton goods are high, and the government encourages domestic production in every way, but the market for fine goods is open to the importer and samples of our products in colored and dyed goods, chambrays, ginghams, and mercerized materials will be of interest, in response to the demand for these goods which are not made in the native mills.

China.

China, second only to India in its importation of cotton goods, offers an unlimited field for Massachusetts' products. The annual imports for a series of years average $100,000,000, and often exceed that figure if prices are favorable. The population of this vast empire is more than 425,000,000, and their material for clothing is almost exclusively of cotton, — plain or quilted. It is sometimes made of silk, but almost never of wool. Cotton is grown everywhere, indifferently, as a local catch crop, and is made up in the home by the women and children, on which account it is readily conceivable that the bulk of China's supply of cotton goods is entirely independent of foreign sources, and it is this fact which best explains the yearly fluctuations. Large in volume as the imports are known to be, it is estimated that they constitute not one-tenth of the value of the cotton goods used in China, for the per capita annual consumption in cottons varies from one dollar to eight dollars according to the locality, and probably averages not less than three.

For the market in general the controlling idea should be low prices. Notwithstanding this fact, however, American goods stand high, because the experience of the Chinese consumer makes him appreciate the difference in wearing qualities in grades which compete with the heavy hand-loom goods made from poor quality Chinese cotton. Nevertheless, should our manufacturers send a cheaper grade of goods than they now appear to be willing to manufacture, they could command a market ten times as large as that which they now hold, and from the point of view of supplying a people with what they wish to buy, or of meeting their purchasing power with goods which come within their means — the sending of the less expensive grades would seem to be a good business policy. Especially is this true if we consider the recent expansion of the cotton industry among the Japanese, who frankly imitate American cloths, brands, and styles, in cheaper material which will eventually tend to decrease our sales.

Ten-fold increase in market with cheaper

The gray sheetings and plain shirtings of our Massachusetts' mills are used in more parts of China than any other fabric. In drills, we have already nearly three-quarters of the import trade. These goods go to the northern ports of China as do also cotton flannels and stripes, while the finer and lighter goods are in demand in the southern and warmer section of the country.

The increasing demand for American knitting machines for both stockings and underwear will not be overlooked, preference being given them over the German machines because of their less complicated construction. The yarn market in China is also very important and comprises approximately 40 per cent of the present imports of cotton goods annually.

With improved transportation facilities this immense country will be opened up for exploitation and a taste for finer cotton manufactures developed. Meanwhile, the market is large enough to have goods made up specially for it in designs and cloths suited to the tastes of the people regardless of the demand in other places. The total exports from the United States in cotton goods to China in 1913 was approximately $8,250,000.

Japan.

In Japan, as in China, a large proportion of the cotton goods used in the country is made on hand looms in the home. Japan, however, does not grow cotton to any extent as is apparent from the fact that of the import trade in 1912, $308,258,154, — $99,069,000, or practically one-third, was raw cotton. Of this, half or over comes from India, a small portion from China, and the remainder is American cotton to give the mixture whiteness and lustre.

A story runs that back in the middle of the 19th century, previous to the opening of the country to foreign trade, a ship one day made its appearance at one of the Japanese islands and, among other things, left a small amount of machine-made yarn spun from American cotton. No one had any knowledge of how such beautiful yarn could be made, or knew of what material it was constructed, but so great was the interest that it was forwarded to Nishijin, a famous center of hand-loom silk weaving, and, after much discussion, it was decided that it was a mixture of cotton and silk, and its value fixed accordingly.

In the upbuilding of the cotton industry the Japanese have been favored by an abundance of extremely cheap labor and freedom from laws prohibiting long hours, but have been greatly hampered by the lack of <sup>Handicapped

The first small spinning mill was operated in 1866 and power spinning has been extensively developed, but the weaving side of the industry was not started until 1888, and is as yet in process of development. The Japanese will, therefore, be interested in the power looms of Massachusetts' manufacture and in other textile machines which are our specialized products. We should maintain our leadership also in exports of electrical apparatus, paper-making machines, turning lathes, pipes and fittings, and paper. Purchases on our part of raw silk, the principal item in Japan's export budget, hides and skins, tea, rice, and straw goods will make business between the two countries mutually profitable.

THE ADVANTAGES OF BOSTON, THE CAPITAL CITY OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Boston, the capital city of Massachusetts, and chief commercial center of New England, has an economic position equaled by few and surpassed by none. Situated on the seacoast at the confluence of the Charles and Mystic Rivers, in a middle position between North and South, it has easy access to all the European countries and to the eastern states of South America, and now, by way of the Panama Canal, to all Western South America, Oceania, and the countries of the Far East.

Its relatively high latitude of 42 degrees north gives it all the advantages of nearness to the seaboard of Newfoundland, and consequently to the fisheries of the Grand Banks, and its location near the warm southern region of the Atlantic coastal plain, — Maryland, Virginia, and the Carolinas — makes possible the valuable exchange of production with a semi-tropical climate. The average summer temperature of the city for a period of forty-four years is about 70 degrees, and the average winter temperature approximately 30 degrees.

Historical Landmarks.

Described as far back as 1780 by a distinguished French visitor as a "magnificent prospect of houses that did not seem a modern settlement so much as an ancient city enjoying all the embellishments that never fail to attend on commerce and the arts," Boston has developed in beauty with each succeeding decade. Rich in historical landmarks and traditions, her metropolitan limits include the fields of Lexington and Concord, America's first vantage ground of independence on which the

Embattled farmer stood
And fired the shot heard round the world.

The Paul Revere house, the birthplace of Benjamin Franklin, Faneuil Hall, King's Chapel, Old North Church, and the Old Granary burying ground, containing the graves of the founders of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, one of the first permanent settlements in America, — are only a few of the immediate points of interest.

The harbor is one of the safest in the world, beautifully dotted with islands which diminish the force of the sea and at the same time act as a defence, permitting pleasant ocean excursions and offering all the attractions of the seashore during the summer season.

Her park system opens up the avenues to a thousand miles of State highway through the inviting New England country. Her hotel accommodations are unsurpassed by any city in the world, — convention and exhibition halls are fitted up for every possible call of pleasure or comfort and are large enough to care for thousands of tourists at any season of the year.

Population and Industries.

Boston has a resident population of about 700,000, a daily influx from the metropolitan cities and towns of at least 1,500,000 more, and within a fifty-mile radius there are approximately three and one-half million inhabitants. It is the center of the wealthiest purchasing community in the United States, the wealth per capita $2,159, leading all other places of importance in the country. The per capita wealth of New York in 1913 was only $1,844, Pittsburg, $1,292, Baltimore, $1,116, Philadelphia, $845, St. Louis, $822, and Chicago, $381.

Side by side with her importance as a distributing center her manufactures have developed over a wide range of industries, amounting in Boston proper to $252,000,000 in 1913, and in the Metropolitan district to upwards of $560,000,000, of which $100,000,000 represents the shoe manufacturing industry alone. Printing and publishing of books and periodicals is a most successful service industry amounting to some $28,000,000 annually; manufactures of clothing, $27,125,000, Rubber boots and shoes and other manufactures of rubber, $25,166,000, Foundry and machine shop products, $20,408,000, Confectionery, $17,991,000, Leather, tanned, curried and finished, $12,116,985, Brewery products, $8,647,000, and the manufactures of tobacco, $7,090,000.

Boston is the leather market of the United States, — for no matter at what port hides and skins are received they must be forwarded to Boston to be sold. It is the world's greatest shoe center, shipments to domestic and foreign markets being upwards of 200,000,000 pairs annually, the two largest shoe manufacturing cities in the world, Lynn and Brockton, being within half an hour's distance by rail. As a wool market it is second only to London, handling a business of $70,000,000 annually, with a prospect of great immediate increase since the recent revision of the tariff has placed wool on the free list. The receipts of foreign wool for 1913 were 225,137,005 pounds. As the distributing center not only of the State of Massachusetts, but of all New England, she handles nearly one-sixth of the manufactures of the United States, — for, out of the twenty billion dollar product of the country at the last census, New England's share was $2,670,065,000.

Boston as a Port.

Boston is the second largest port in the United States and the fifth largest in the world, being preceded by New York, London, Hamburg, and Rotterdam. No terminal anywhere is better equipped for the efficient handling of freight. The problem of lightering so common in other ports is agreeably absent, all docks being connected directly with the railroad service of the city. In addition to private enterprise, the State is at present improving some 8,500,000 feet of land out of the 38,000,000 at its disposal and making it available for industrial and warehouse sites. The new Commonwealth Pier at South Boston, just completed at a cost of $3,500,000, is 1200 feet long and 400 feet wide with forty feet of water at low tide and fifty feet at high water mark. The buildings have an area of 900,000 square feet, or about twenty acres of floor space and a wharf frontage of over half a mile. This single pier can accommodate five 500-foot ships at once, provide for 150 freight or passenger cars and handle over 1000 passengers an hour. The largest liners afloat can dock with ease and have several hundred feet to spare.

The Hoosac and Mystic piers in Charlestown, the Boston and Albany Railroad piers at East Boston, and the New York, New Haven and Hartford piers at South Boston, all handle enormous traffic, the grain elevators at these several terminals having a capacity of 2,500,000 bushels of grain which they can load into vessels at the rate of 10,000 bushels an hour.

The Dry-Dock.

The State, under the management of the Port Directors, is at present building the largest dry-dock in the world, 1,200 feet long, 150 feet wide and with 45 feet of water at high tide. This will cost $3,000,000 of which $500,000 has already been expended. A similar dock is to be built at East Boston for the promotion of commerce at that important point.

The Fish Pier.

Boston is the most important fishing port in the two Americas, rivaling the fishing interests of Grimsby, England. For the advantageous pursuit of the fish industry another public pier known as Commonwealth Pier 6 was completed in 1913 at a cost to the State of $1,000,000. This pier is nearly a quarter of a mile long and buildings costing $2,000,000 have been erected for the fish market. The catch in 1913 amounted to 166,000,000 pounds and brought, at first price, $7,500,000.

Passenger and Foreign Service.

The steamship piers in the harbor are not more than an hour from the open sea and it is only ten or fifteen minutes to a railroad station or to any hotel in the city. More people pass through Boston railroad terminals than through any other city in the United States. On steam roads alone there were 75,000,000 in 1913, besides 326,352,863 passengers on elevated and trolley lines. There are 52 steamship lines in service at the port extending to all parts of the world, 36 in the foreign trade and 16 coastwise. It is a day's sail nearer Europe by the most direct navigable routes than New York, or any large Atlantic port. It is nearer to South America than the Pacific coast ports by more than 1,000 miles, and it is also nearer than New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, or the ports of the Gulf of Mexico. Big combination passenger and freight boats are in the Boston service, the freight assuring the passengers of a steady, comfortable voyage, and the passenger business assuring the shippers of a speedy and cheap delivery of their goods.

With reference to the Canadian business, both export and import, particularly during six months of the year when the traffic is heaviest and the St. Lawrence River is frozen over, Boston is the logical winter port, handling in 1913, $44,-332,000 of Canadian commerce.

Educational Advantages.

Boston, always identified with all the liberal movements of the age, is the educational center of the Western Hemisphere and the Mecca of school teachers from all over the country. She leads fifty of the principal American cities in expenditures for maintaining public schools, the per capita cost being $6.89 as against $6.86 for New York; $6.60 for Washington, D. C.; $6.35 for Pittsburg; $4.53 for Chicago; and $3.88 for Philadelphia.

Within the Metropolitan district are included such world-renowned institutions as Harvard University, Radcliffe College (for women), Tufts College, Boston College, The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, The Perkins Institution for the Blind, and the Horace Mann School for the Deaf. Only a little farther away are Amherst College and the Massachusetts Agricultural College at Amherst, Clark University and Clark College at Worcester, Williams College at Williamstown, Holy Cross College at Worcester, Wellesley College (for women) at Wellesley, Smith College (for women) at Northampton, Mt. Holyoke College (for women) at South Hadley, the Textile Schools at Fall River, Lowell, and New Bedford, and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, besides numerous continuation schools and a great choice of public lecture courses. Her school system dates back to 1635, only five years subsequent to the settlement of the city, when the Boston Public Latin School was established. Harvard College was established one year later, in 1636.

THE LABOR SUPPLY AND THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS WAGE-EARNER.

In addition to her supply of native workmen, Massachusetts has for centuries secured her wage-earners from the very best material in the races of Northern and Eastern Europe, and abundantly has she drawn on this source for the expansion of her industries. The process of assimilation has gone on through long years since 1630, until the descendants of these immigrants form a very considerable portion of our population.

Under the happy combination of a favorable climate and comparatively easy access to food, enhanced by effective railroad facilities, we have been able to accumulate capital and to use it largely in the establishment of manufacturing enterprises. In a State like ours, where the industries are still expanding, the demand for skilled labor keeps wages at a high level. Add to this our system of free education pursued as it is through part-time and continuation schools, it is easy, in comparison with the opportunities afforded in other States and countries, for our wage-earners to advance to the higher business and social groups.

Social progress is everywhere apparent in the relatively large proportion of workers organized into trades unions, and wage schedules are not by any means fixed by employers, but rather by contracts in which the wage-earners have an increasingly effective voice. At the same time, because of his fairmindedness and of his willingness to do his share towards the equalization of opportunities, the Massachusetts manufacturer commands the highest respect. He feels that his workmen are as indispensable to him as he to them, and in times of stress the community has never appealed to him in vain. As a matter of fact, Massachusetts is the pioneer

State in every movement for the uplift and welfare of the wage-earner, as demonstrated in the record of her laws for shortening the hours of labor and improving its conditions, for the protection of women, the prohibition of child labor, and the adoption of wage minima.

Perhaps the most noteworthy characteristic of the Massachusetts wage-earner is his interest in public affairs, his intention to inform himself as to matters of legislation and to obtain his desires by appeal to the popular vote. Although, in common with all other countries, we have our difficulties and our periods of business depression, nevertheless the great masses of our people have high purchasing power and an enviable capacity for accumulating savings and participating in the better things of life. The savings banks deposits in 1913 amounted to no less than one and one half billions of dollars.

CONCLUSION.

The intensity of the present general interest in our export trade makes it especially desirable to focus the attention upon the all important need of launching constructive plans of trade development, and to realize that we have the facilities and are in a position to secure an enviable place in the world's export manufactures market. Now is the time for our cotton manufacturers to appreciate the tremendous possibility of turning the bulk of our cotton crop — nearly three-quarters of the world's supply — into domestic manufactures of cotton so that we may be able literally to clothe the world. Now is the time for our boot and shoe manufacturers to expand their business so as to pierce new foreign markets, thereby seconding the successful efforts attained by Massachusetts in Continental Europe and to branch out and extend their field indefinitely until we actually supply the world with shoes of incomparable style, workmanship, and material.

Similar success awaits our efforts in the field of fine tools and machinery, in manufactures of electrical apparatus, firearms, automobiles, and other industries where specialization and factory refinements have been carried to perfection.

Given the necessary financial equipment, the requisite for a permanent hold upon foreign markets is a genuine superiority in the goods themselves; and the winning of these markets may be assured only through patient and persistent effort in developing more intimate business and social relations with our foreign customers.

To this end the Massachusetts Panama-Pacific Commission urges upon our Massachusetts manufacturers the necessity of selecting the proper representatives to demonstrate and sell their goods, and we take pleasure in cordially inviting the representatives of the Latin-American States, Canada, Australia, Russia, and the countries of the Far East brought nearer to us by the new water route, to come to Massachusetts and establish offices here for the transaction of a commerce which shall be at once mutually pleasant and profitable.
